Eighteen fieldmen will soon be walking Iowa's small grain fields in search of weeds and of mixtures with other crops and varieties. Joe L. Robinson, secretary of the Iowa Crop Improvement Association, says that each of these men has been schooled in the art of inspecting for production of quality seed.

About 900 small grain fields will be checked by these 18 fieldmen in July. Most of the 900 fields are Shelby oat fields. Moore is the favorite barley crop.

Most of the fieldmen who will be calling on certified seed producers this summer are experienced in the work. Some have been inspecting for certification for as long as 10 years.

Fieldmen make calls on growers at unexpected times to see that fields are in top condition to produce high-quality seed. Each field is checked for insolation distances; that is, each edge of the field is examined to see that no other grains of the same variety are close enough to be mixed in with the seed to be certified.

Primary noxious weeds such as Canada thistle, quackgrass or leafy spurge are noted by the fieldmen and must be destroyed. Other weeds are also listed.

Fields are also examined to see that other crops and varieties of the same crop are not mixed in with seed to be certified. If mixtures are found, the grower must pull foreign plants before the field can be certified.

Robinson says this is the fist step in production of seed of known, high quality. Fieldmen list all conditions found in fields, and the certification agency knows whether it can pass a field as high-quality certified seed or not. All seed that passes field inspections and late seed inspections carries an official blue tag.

A town must have a population of 12,000 before it can be a city.

CITY DUMPS CAN BE BANISHED

From open garbage dumps and other trash disposal areas all over Iowa squadrons of flies rise each day during the summer to spread out over the countryside.

They may end up as uninvited guests at your dinner table, said Paul Henderson, Hancock County Extension Director today. When they come, they'll wade in the gravy, wipe their feet on the bread, and leave a trail of filth over the meat and potatoes, he pointed out.

To get rid of neighbors with such annoying habits Henderson advocates getting rid of the dumps. When you destroy fly-breeding places, the fly population drops in a hurry.

Fortunately, there is a fairly simple way of wiping out all public dumps, together with the flies, rats, vermin and odors that go with them. The Iowa State Department of health says the sanitary land fill method of garbage and trash disposal can be practiced by any community without a great deal of expense.

The only equipment necessary is a bulldozer, road maintainer or other heavy equipment such as most cities and towns possess. An open stretch of wasteland must also be available. To dispose of refuse a shallow ditch is dug with the equipment available. Each day's accumulation is placed in the ditch, and compacted by running over it with a bulldozer or heavy equipment. Then the ditch is covered, and the earth pressed down over it.

This method was used by the United States army during World War II, and is now being considered or tried by a number of Iowa cities. Health officials says an acre of ground will take care of the garbage from 10,000 persons.

AROUND IOWA

Oldest Dies

Iowa lost its oldest resident recently, in the death of William Mort, 106, at the home of his daughter in Cantril. His birthday had been observed on June first, just prior to his final illness.

Found Ring

While H. A. Anderson of Hawarden was helping load shelled corn he lost his daimond ring in a truck load of corn. When he unloaded his truck the corn was run through a wire screen and the ring was recovered when about half the corn had been unloaded.

Caught

When Eugene Slocum decided to dig his way out of the Guthrie County jail, the noise he made caused some children to become suspicious and they called the sheriff. When Slocum finished making a hole in the brick wall, he slid out of the jail into the handcuffs of Sheriff J. C. McCool.

Escaped

Three year old Susuan Murphy of Waverly fell from the car in which she was riding recently, as the family drove home from Shell Rock. She was unconscious for a time but is recoving.

Still The Same

A wedding gift list for a ceremony held in Belmond fifty years ago shows that wedding gifts are still much the same; towels, dishes, etc. But one item seldom shows up among the wedding gifts any more; a "cuff and collar box."

Hurt

At Sutherland, 81 year old Mary McGraw is recoving from an injury received when she caught her hand in a washing machine wringer. And at Swea City, little 2½ year old Theresa Mullis, at the other end of the age scale, received a bruised hand which became caught in a pump jack.

Moth

A nocturnal visitor kept bumping into the screened porch of the Gilman Hegon home at Eldon one night recently. Investigation revealed that the would-be intruder was a lovely pale green Luna moth, measuring five inches across its wings.

To Guatamela

Richard Delong of Lamoni, Ames undergraduate, will spend the summer in Guatamela. He will work in the Iowa State college tropical research center. He's the first undergraduate to make the trip. The research center was set up in 1946.

100 YEARS OF BROTHERHOOD

YMCA Charts Five-Part Program To Cover Rural Areas of Nation

(The second of two articles.)

One hundred years ago the Young Men's Christian Association, known familiarly to four generations of Americans as the "Y", was founded in the U. S. to fight vice, degradation and delinquency in the cities. Now, in planning its next century, the YMCA is going to move into small towns and rural areas.

The YMCA began aiding servicemen during the Civil War when Y workers, called "Christians" by the soldiers, followed both armies to serve decently cooked hot meals, help tend the wounded and insist on the humane treatment of prisoners of war. In the Spanish American War, they introduced doughnuts and coffee to soldiers. At one battle they arrived with their rations some three hours ahead of the troops! During World War I, the Y, according to General Pershing, performed 90 per cent of the welfare work for soldiers overseas and during the recent conflict, as now, the YMCA comprised one-third of the soldier-service organization known as the U.S.O.

The best of the Y's hundred years of experience will go into the new five-part program designed to cover non-urban areas The organization will work this way:

1. The Small City Association, to operate as independent units in cities under 25,000 population.

2. The Town and Country Association, covering both farms and small towns in a single county or group of counties.

3. The County Branch, covering a rural area centered about a large city.

4. The Outreach Program, extending from a thriving city YMCA to cover small neighboring communities.

5. The District Program, all rural, directed by the state YMCA organization but sponsored socially and financially by the area served.

FINANCIAL PROBLEMS, of course, will play a large part in the Y's scheduled rural drive. YMCA officials emphasize that the Y cannot and will not begin at the outset to construct large, streamlined buildings, with hotel space, gymnasium, meeting rooms and swimming pools in order to lure members. A YMCA, they explain, must first establish a firm spiritual foundation and a record for concrete service to the community before it can begin to think in terms of permanent headquarters.

Instead, the organization burden will fall largely on the rural secretary, a YMCA career man who has been given special training for his job and, more likely than not, been educated at one of the Y's twenty-five degree-granting colleges. He will begin, like the founders of the first YMCA in Boston in December of 1851, by interesting social-minded members of the community in the Y movement. He may work through churches of all denominations or through the public schools. Depending upon how long he has been in the area he will spend three months to a year observing local conditions and then report lengthily to his superiors on how, in his opinion, the YMCA can best improve its foothold in your community and extend its services to the people who live there.

The stated purpose of the Y, which is to develop Christian leadership among the nation's youth, has already helped to mould the character of such YMCA alumni as President Truman, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Douglas, Gene Tunney, Senator Robert Taft of Ohio and thousands of other figures of national importance. Its fondest hope for the future is that it can help to build similar qualities in the young men and women who must see the nation safely through its next hundred years.

EVERYBODY but Columbia Pictures has plans for Rita Hayworth; her home studio is just waiting for her to report for work. With a large part of the American public agog to see her because of her much publicized romance, they could put her into a dramatization of the alphabet and make millions. Virginia Van Upp has completed two stories for Rita, and it is rumored that Metro wants to borrow her for "The Merry Widow". What would really make the customers storm the box offices would be a remake of "The Shiek", co-starring her with Tony Dexter, of "Valentino" fame. Or would that come dangerously close to being autobiographical?

Gertrude Astor begins her 37th year in pictures by playing the role of the landlady in "The Dark Page". She says she must have appeared in 1400 films, beginning in 1914 when she went to California to work in "Under Two Flags".

Jackie Kelk, "Homer" of "The Aldrich Family", has just received an offer of more than $5,000 for his extensive postage stamp collection; it was made by Louis Ramvuela, who owns cattle ranches in Argentina. Kelk hates to sell it.

Meredith Willson's "May the Good Lord Bless and Keep You", written as a theme song for "The Big Show" and introduced six months ago, has been recorded by top artists, become a standard item on programs of Ezio Pinza, Gracie Fields and Jan Peerce, is used for assembly closing in schools, colleges and churches, and is the song most popular with GI's in Korea.

Joan Fontaine got very little publicity when she curtsied to Madam Peron, did somewhat better when she did Paris with Prince Aly Khan, whose marriage to Rita reaped headlines for her.

THE FICTION CORNER

ANOTHER GOOD CROP

By James B. Holm

FARM FOLKS are always asking a squire for information and advice on law. Dave Tidwell was no exception.

Dave was a leathery faced man in his sixties. I was attracted by a peach tree on his place, then in full bearing. He gave me a few peaches.

3-Minute Fiction

Dave's place didn't look any too prosperous. He spoke of his dilapidated old car near the barn.

"I guess I'll never have money enough to buy a new one," he said. "Can't make anything on this place now."

I could see he had something else on his mind. Pretty soon he started to ask questions.

"Squire, who does money belong to if it's found hidden in a man's barn?"

"Why, I suppose it would belong to him, unless someone else could prove direct ownership," I told him.

More questions were asked, rather cautiously. At length he said:

"I used to have a hired man named Obie Hart. Don't know if you ever heard of him or not. He's dead now. He was a good fellow.

"When he was a young man, he and his brother Sid lived around here. Obie got engaged to a girl but she threw him over for Sid. Obie always hated Sid for that and left home. Never spoke to Sid again. He came to work for me nearly forty years ago and stayed until last year when he died. I didn't pay him much but he saved his money. He didn't trust banks, either, and he never married.

I could see he had something else on his mind. Pretty soon he started to ask questions.

"AFTER HE GOT sick last year Obie didn't live long. One day I was talking to him and he said, 'Dave, if anything happens to me I got money enough in my clothes to bury me. Better get it right now—over there.' I did and we counted it out. He acted like he wanted to tell me something more, but all he ever said was that he didn't want Sid to have anything of his

"A few days later Obie died. The money wasn't quite enough to bury him, but that was all right. I paid the balance. Sure enough, Sid came snooping around, inquiring about Obie's money. I told him what I knew but I guess he didn't believe me. Argued on it and huffed and puffed. Was real ugly about it, too. He claimed Obie's clothes and watch. Probably his by law anyhow. I couldn't prove anything different, could I?"

"Now here a couple of weeks ago I was working in the barn and came across a wad of ten dollar bills stuck away in a mortise slot. Wasn't a great deal. I don't know who put it there. Who does the money belong to?"

"Dave," I said, "I can't advise you, but if it had been me that found it, I wouldn't do any hunting for an owner. It's your barn, isn't it?"

We looked at each other with the light of understanding between us.

"I don't know if there's any more there or not," said Dave. "As I said, I don't know what Obie did with his money. He must have accumulated quite a little in forty years. He may have done something with it I don't know about, or anyone. Anyhow, he liked to be alone around the barn a great deal."

"Dave," I said, "what people don't know won't hurt them. If I found any money in my barn I would regard it as another good crop. If anyone thought different, it would be up to him to prove his claim."

Dave looked satisfied. "I guess I can trust you, can't I, squire?"

I forgot all about the matter until a year later. Then Dave Tidwell came to my office carrying a half bushel basket of peaches.

"These are some of the peaches you liked so well, squire," he said. "I had another nice crop this year. Matter of fact, all crops were good this year. No charge. My regards."

The look he gave me was a peculiar, knowing one and confidential like.

I looked out my window and saw Dave drive away. He was driving a nice new automobile. It was a make that must have cost twenty-five hundred dollars or more.

GOP Again Faced With Lack of Positive Platform

By Wright A. Patterson

THE REPUBLICANS have named their time and place, July 7, 1952, at Chicago. The especially important part of the next presidential campaign remains. I believe the most important is the party program, the stating in clear and definite terms what the party proposes to the American voters. In many ways, it is of more importance at this time than the selection of candidates.

That program must be of a positive nature. No longer can the party appeal successfully to the voters by merely "viewing with alarm" the policies and actions of the opposition. What the voters want to know is what the Republicans will do if they are returned to power. They want the assurance that there will be a definite turn to the right; that our free enterprise system will be preserved; that the continuous growth in the bureaucratic army will stop, and the numbers of that army be diminished.

They want to be assured that we will continue our war preparations, but will discontinue, for a time at least, the unnecessary home projects that we can get along without, and by so doing, relieve the taxpayer of a considerable portion of the load he has been carrying.

Such are some of the definite pronouncements the voters are looking for. They will not be satisfied with only condemnation for the present, or any past, administration. They want to know what the Republicans propose for the future.

In 1940, 44 and 48 the Republicans had an opportunity to win. They muffed all three chances by not proposing a definite program, and sounding hard on that program. This 1952 looks like, not only another, but the best of four opportunities to win, provided Republican leadership can and will produce a positive platform which the voters will support.

This is no time or place for indecision. The time is for a definite and constructive program that will put America back on the prosperity highway, maintain our economy and outlaw inflation. Can the Republican leadership draft such a program and express it in implicit, and easily understandable phraseology?

Picking the candidates is the next important step yet to be taken. Should a popular hero soldier, such as either Eisenhower or MacArthur be the candidate of either party, he would be virtually assured of election. MacArthur removed himself from consideration by the statement he made in San Francisco, a statement I am sure he meant. Eisenhower's political affiliations are not definitely known, and he could be a candidate of either party.

It is hardly probable that he would be a candidate for the Democratic nomination if the President wishes again to be the candidate of his party.

Of the strictly political leaders Taft seems to have the most strength. He demonstrated in Ohio that he is a vote getter and that the leaders of organized labor cannot dictate the politics of that group. Aside from some one of our military heroes, Taft seems to be the logical Republican candidate, and he would stand on a turn-to-the-right platform and back such a plank to the limit.

But unless Republican leaders can get together and formulate a Republican platform that has an appeal to a majority of the voters and offer such a program as a promise of the party to the people, 1952 will possibly be but another of the muffed opportunities.

It will not be long now before politics will drive Korea off the front pages.

The best time to go fishing will be August and September of next year. Then you can escape political oratory.

How much of the 52 per cent of the vote the President polled four years ago, can he regain before the first Tuesday in November, 1952?

Wars are costly affairs. Even after the shooting stops, the cost of pensions is to be reckoned with, and they go on forever.

The adoption of that last constitutional amendment insures us against another Roosevelt performance as a continuous candidate. It is now two terms and out.

SCANNING THE WEEK'S NEWS of Main Street and the World

Korean Conflict Is One Year Old; World War May Have Been Averted

SOON, IF AT ALL—A few days ago—June 25—the Korean war was one year old. Today, after a year of fighting Communism in battle, the questions uppermost in the minds of most Americans is what are the chances for world peace? Is World War III nearer or more remote?

A great many unknown factors and "ifs" arise with such questions. But there is a growing belief in the world today that a general war is more remote than a year ago. This reasoning is based mainly upon two points: (1) The free nations of the world are growing stronger every day; (2) the free world has demonstrated in deeds as well as words it will resist aggression.

There is one fact that none of the free nations of the world is overlooking. There is the possibility, in the face of the west's growing strength, that the Soviet Union realizes it must act soon, if at all. To wait would only give the west time to grow so strong that victory for Communism would be an impossibiliy.

The Korean war seems to have accomplished several things. It brought to life the west's lagging plans to marshal military, political and economic resources to meet future aggression. And these moves may have served as a deterrent to ambitious aggressors.

TEXAS TOUR— Gen. Douglas MacArthur flew to Texas for a number of official receptions and speeches For three days he preached his doctrine of a realistic approach to far east problems. He went so far in a Dallas speech as to say "it is fantastically unrealistic to refuse to accept the fact that we are at war—a bitter, savage and costly war."

But the colorful general who has caused more controversy in a few months than many prominent figures do in a lifetime, departed from his main theme to take a slap at the domestic policies of the Truman administration.

"There are those who seek to make the burden of taxation so great and the progressive increases so alarming that the spirit of adventure, tireless energy, and masterful initiative which built the material strength of the nation shall become stultified and inert," he said. "There are those who seek to make all men servants of the state."

The departure from the main theme of his speeches since he returned to the United States increased speculation that the general may be planning a political career despite his assertion he is not interested in entering politics. The Texas visit has been called a test for future political moves.

GRAIN FOR INDIA— The long delayed grain for India bill, lending India $190,000,000 on easy terms to buy to to 2,000,000 tons of U.S. wheat and other basic foodstuffs, was signed into law by President Truman.

The bill was subject to months of heavy debate in congress before it was finally passed. Critics argued that India's opposition to some U.S. policies in Korea made her an ill deserving beneficiary. Backers said it had a humanitarian purpose and, besides, it would help line up India with the western world as opposed to the Communist bloc.

In the months of debate many forgot the fact that the food purchased by the loan will prevent famine in India. It was the only humane thing this nation could do.

PRICE CONTROLS—By the time this reaches print the defense production act which gives the government the power to control prices, wages and rents may or may not have been extended. In all probability it will have, but it will not contain the broader powers as asked by President Truman.

Special interests—the cattle industry, landlords, the building industry and others—have used every trick at their command to get amendments tacked to the act that would be to their advantage.

As a result, the house banking committee voted tentatively to knock out two future price rollbacks on live cattle planned by the office of price stabilization. Also, the senate banking committee voted to renew and expand the government's rent-control program. But the senate committee at the same time recommended a raise in some of the rent ceilings.

The committee felt that a 20 per cent increase should be allowed in some areas. Many of these areas already had from 10 to 30 per cent increases above 1942 levels.

As for the house vote on beef rollbacks, it was a direct slap at the administration's beef policies. The vote was in the form of an amendment that would limit future price rollbacks on all agricultural commodities to 90 per cent of prices on May 19, 1951.

Whatever its form, the new defense production act will be far from what President Truman asked.

MACARTHUR HEARINGS—Any day, now the MacArthur hearings will close. It would be interesting to know what historians will make of the incident and read into the millions of words of testimony.

No hearing or debate in American history ever caused so much comment in the big towns and the home towns of the nation. And possibly no incident in modern history, excepting World War II and the Korean war, received such coverage in the nation's press. It made good reading in dailies and small town newspapers alike.

The debate may have been good for the nation, and certainly, was carried out in the best American tradition of free speech and thought. But there was one regretable aspect of the hearing. Our potential enemies now know the inner thoughts and reasoning of American foreign policy. Our policies are an open book to the entire world.

RESERVISTS TO GO HOME—Home town enlisted reservists—not members of organized reserve or national guard units—are going to be released by the army. Approximately 100,000 will be released in the next six months.

There will be no "point system" or other inflexible standards to determine the order in which the reservists are released. Each unit will set up its own standards, giving "primary consideration" to maintaining maximum effectiveness.

But veterans who served 90 days or more during World War II are to be let out first under the general standards set up by the army. Reservists who have had previous military service other than World War II are to get second priority.

Truman Presented With 4-H Club Key

Marjorie Nold, Savannah, Mo., and Richard Golob, Sunnyside, Wash., delegates to the 21st National 4-H Club Camp in the nation's capital, present a 4-H club key to President Truman. More than 200 delegates from 48 states, U. S. territories, and seven nations attended the camp.

AMERICAN DOCUMENTS

Constitution to be Preserved in Glass

America's most precious documents—the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution—will be preserved permanently in glass, it was announced recently in Washington.

Work on finding a suitable way of preserving the parchments began a decade ago, but was interrupted by World War II. Since the revival of the project, officials of the Library of Congress, scientists of the National Bureau of Standards and Thermopane technicians of Libbey-Owen-Ford glass company have spent nearly four years perfecting special bronze and glass enclosures for the job.

When the two historical symbols of democracy are once safely stored in glass they will be available for inspection by the public.

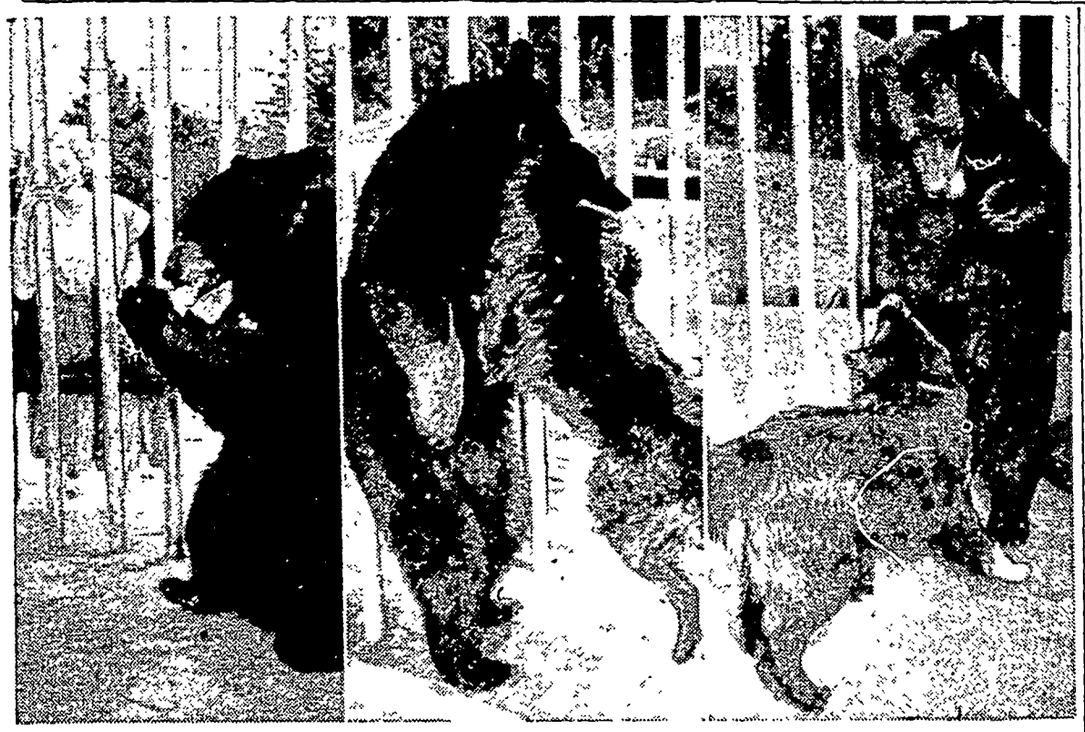
Housework Easy Without Nagging Backache

When kidney function slows down, many folks complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Don't suffer longer with these discomforts if reduced kidney function is getting you down—due to such common causes as stress and strain, over-exertion or exposure to cold. Minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or wrong diet may cause getting up nights or frequent passages.

Don't neglect your kidneys if these conditions bother you. Try Doan's Pills—a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While often otherwise caused, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief from these discomforts—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

DOAN'S PILLS



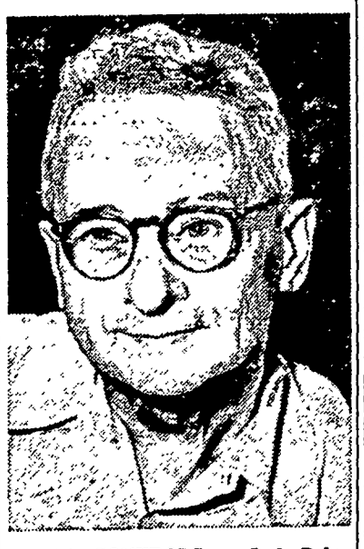
BEGGAR AND THIEF . . . This is the story of Fuzzy, a mendicant of great stomach capacity, and Pal, a thieving canine. Tourists entering Ontario's northlands stop off to see the antics of these animals near North Bay. Fuzzy does the begging but only profits by gulping. Pal is ever alert to squeeze through the cage bars, grab the loot, and dash back to safety. At left, Fuzzy has just succeeded in wheedling a delicious ice cream cone from a lady tourist. But Pal (center) allows him to enjoy the tidbit only a few seconds before he grabs for it. But, Pal's too late. Fuzzy has gulped it down (right). Everything's fine, less Fuzzy gets mad.

CAUGHT IN THE NET . . . Eleven men (shown) and an eight-year-old boy were arrested in East Harlem during the city-wide roundup of dope addicts and drug sellers. Suspects pictured above were booked and held to add to the mounting number of arrests and convictions brought on by the drive against narcotics. Police said that the youngster of eight was a messenger boy for the alleged dope "pushers." Disturbing reports of addiction among youngsters led other cities to crack down on "pushers" and "users," with new arrests bringing startling reports. One family gave baby heroin to "keep it from crying so much."

KING AND CAT . . . King Paul of Greece, wearing uniform of an admiral, is in jovial mood as he sits with his queen Frederica listening to speeches at dedication of a hospital, built with funds contributed by Greek-Americans at Salonika. At right, Crown Prince Constantine seems equally pleased as he listens and holds his pet cat, who must be pleased, too, demonstrating that a cat may indeed be permitted to gaze upon a king. The queen seems intent on same activity—apparently that causing applause of spectators.

SHUTTERBUGGIN' ADMIRAL . . . Responsibilities of commanding naval war are momentarily forgotten as Adm. Arthur W. Radford, commander-in-chief of Pacific and Pacific fleets, snaps a 16-inch gun salvo aboard USS New Jersey off Korean coast.

TRUE APPRECIATION . . . WAF Staff Sgt. Mary Lewis is the recipient of hearty gratitude of Air Force Capt. Robert P. Boyd (left) and Capt. Herbert K. Keenan at Mitchel Air Force base, Long Island. Mary "talked" the pilots safely in to the field when their plane was disabled in bad weather. She has received four commendations and been given charge of the control tower. The happy smiles on the faces of the two officers show how appreciative they are for the nice conversation.

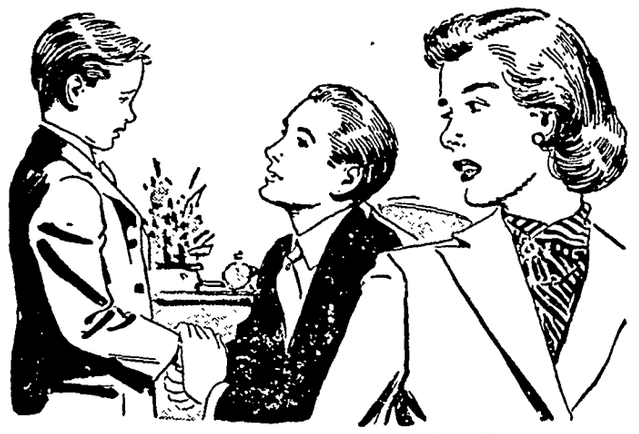


URGES CONTROLS . . . J. A. Pels, 79 year-old retired Cincinnati necktie manufacturer and salesman whose letter urging Truman to retain controls was quoted in President's radio message. "Too many look only at a dollar," Pels said.

MIRROR Of Your MIND

Explain Situation To Adopted Child

By Lawrence Gould



Should you tell a child he is adopted?

Answer: Certainly, but not when you are angry, or so as to imply that you wish you had not taken him. In that case "you will have done him unmendable damage," says Ruth Carson in Public Affairs Pamphlet 173. "So You Want to Adopt a Baby." An adopted child is almost sure to find out the truth some time and it will make him feel there is something shameful about it if you have kept it a secret from him. If he asks you about his "own parents," tell him anything good that you know about them, but don't let him feel—and don't feel yourself—that he inherits anything "bad" from them. It is you, not they, who will determine what he becomes.

May the need to be loved cause neurosis?

Answer: Yes, writes Dr. Leon J. Saul in the Psychoanalytic Quarterly. The capacity to give mature, active love to others is a characteristic of adulthood and not everyone acquires it. But the need to be loved exists in all children, and adults seldom outgrow it. Where this need has been frustrated in infancy or early childhood, it becomes only so much the stronger, expressing itself in the demand for gifts, favors, attention and admiration. One of the most nearly universal of neurotic conflicts is between the need to be loved by others and the urge to punish them for not giving as much love as we want. Even wars may arise from a people's feeling that they are disliked by other nations.

Should you be happiest when alone?

Answer: To be frightened and unhappy when you have to be alone is certainly neurotic, but it is no less so to be happiest when there is no one else around to "bother" you or "get in your way." Human progress and civilization rest on the fact that two or more normal people can not only get more done but enjoy themselves more together than separately. If you get to the point where you don't enjoy a sunset—or a good joke—better when you can share it with someone else, or where you would rather live alone than with a friend, or with a wife or husband, something has gone seriously wrong with your emotional life.

Why Your Doctor Asks Questions

By Dr. James W. Barton

WHAT MANY PATIENTS cannot understand is why the physician asks them so many questions instead of spending all his time making an examination. What they forget is that there are two sides to a physical examination: first, what the physician finds out by examining the patient's heart, lungs and other organs, which is called the objective side of the examination, and, second, the subjective part in which the patient tells about his various symptoms. Both objective and subjective symptoms are equally important.

As a matter of fact, what the patient tells the physician when the physician asks certain questions is often even more important than what the physician finds out for himself. This is especially true of mental and heart ailments.

Because the subjective side, what the patient tells the physician, takes up so much time yet must be included, what is known as the Cornell Medical Index is becoming available to physicians. This is a list of nearly 200 questions which the patient answers in 10 to 20 minutes. This means that the physician can have all this information before the interview In The Journal of the American Medical Association, Drs. Keeve Broadman, Albert J. Edman, Irving Large and Harold G. Wolff, with the technical assistance of Todd H. Broadbent, describe the Cornell Medical Index Health Questionnaire as a self-administered instrument that collects a large body of significant and psychiatric information without the physician's participation so that the physician is ready when the patient arrives.

The Questionnaire is a four-page letter-size sheet on which are 195 questions such as are usually asked during a consultation. The questions are asked in language every patient can understand.

New Problem Plagues Football

By GRANTLAND RICE

Maxims From Methuselah

Take your pick from the tipsters, who give you the winning horse,

But kindly remember the answer in the heart of your black remorse.

Horse racing's an opium dream, beyond all dreams ever spun,

Where every sad bloke in the mob should have won every race that was run.

Did you ever notice, my friend, in the race track's grotto of tears,

How many go to the Seller's maw — how few to the lone Cashier's?

Did you ever notice, old pal, in the race tracks' dizzy spin

There are ninety ways that a horse can lose—with only one way to win?

Football's Double Trouble

Bobby Dodd, head coach and athletic director at Georgia Tech, is one of the ablest men in football. This goes both for coaching and handling all football problems. He has been on the job for at least 20 years, one way or another, so he doesn't have to guess.

Grantland Rice

It so happens that football already has one major problem on the financial side This is television — and the problem is still neck high.

Now, according to Bobby Dodd, football has another problem of even deeper depth. This is the expense of the two-platoon system and unlimited substitution.

Dodd recently told Ed Danforth, veteran sports editor, that only two teams in the big Southeastern Conference were solvent.

"These two are Tennessee and Kentucky," Dodd said. "And the reason they are solvent is they still have something left from their bowl money—two big bowl seasons in the Cotton and Sugar shows.

"Florida and Miami have big advances from the race tracks and dog tracks. But I can tell you the rest of us are up against it financially, and are carrying a load we can't handle too long."

Dodd then goes on to point out what the double-platoon system means. According to Dodd, who certainly ought to know, "it means 100 players and 12 coaches in place of 50 players and six coaches. We only needed 50 players and six coaches in 1945 "

There is another point that Coach Dodd did not stress. In most colleges, football players don't come free. There is the matter of scholarships, books (too often cash), training tables, equipment, traveling expenses, all in addition to the coaching staffs.

More than a few colleges have admitted that it costs a big-time university or college $250,000 a year to run a football team. Not many colleges can stand that pace. Army, Navy, Michigan, Ohio State, Texas, SMU and a few others can. Tennessee and Kentucky can, as long as they collect $100,000 in Bowl money every year. But they can't all crowd into bowls every season.

The Alligator Bowl at Jacksonville has now taken its place among the leaders, and this means four big bowls outside of the Rose. But even this can't take care of all football, if Bobby Dodd is right.

The Two Problems

Football has moved into the television tangle in the same manner. It has a committee, headed by Captain Tom Hamilton of Pittsburgh, working out a plan of partial TV use.

No one can say in advance just how effective this plan for stopping bankruptcy will be. But Hamilton happens to be one of the smartest football executives the game has, and he believes the situation can be worked out.

There will be a limited number of live TV contests, and the entire college field must work together. Two or three big teams could break away to work on their own and wreck the entire plan.

Just what will happen to Bobby Dodd's complaint about unlimited substitution and the double-platoon system is something that must be taken up later. I understand a big battle will take place to move the game back to its old methods of substitution.

The Importance of Putting

For a great many years there have been two steamed-up schools of thought among golfers about the importance or overimportance of putting, compared to wood and iron play.

In scoring a 72 for 18 holes, you are supposed to have taken 36 strokes with some 13 other clubs, and 36 strokes with the putter. Is the size of the cup responsible? Should it be what it is today, or larger or smaller? It's a question.

Millions of golfers know the feeling of hitting a fine drive, a fine iron and later having a three- or four-foot putt quiver on the lip of the cup without dropping. The half-inch putt remaining costs as much as a 250-yard drive.

Visiting around Iowa

by Joe Marsh

Iowa's Human Yardstick

Ever hear of the Iowan who spends so much time fishing that he's had the legal lengths for most Iowa fishes tatooed on his forearm?

It seems he measures a smallmouth bass on his bare right arm. If the fish is short of the 10-inch tattoo mark, back in the water he goes. If he tips the 10-inch mark, he stays in the boat.

Wouldn't it be fine if all folks were as conscientious as that . . . with a sort of "Golden Rule" tatooed in their minds somewhere?

It might flash a measuring stick, mentally, when a person got too critical of his neighbors. Or it might warn when he became rigid or intolerant over petty little things.

We all could use it, at times. Maybe I don't like fishing, but Cousin Ed does. Maybe Ed likes coffee, and I prefer a temperate glass of beer. It's everyone's right of free choice, and we need to remember that as conscientiously as this fellow remembers to check the size fish he catches.

Candelight Ceremony At Methodist Sunday Eve

GLORIA HAEFNER, FRANCIS SHERWOOD EXCHANGE VOWS JULY 15TH

Rev. E. M. Egeland Officiated At Double Ring Ceremony

In a double-ring candle-light ceremony at the Klemme Methodist Church on Sunday evening, July 15th, Miss Gloria Haefner, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Haefner of Klemme, became the Bride of Francis Sherwood of Mason City, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Sherwood of Klemme. Rev. E. M. Egeland read the ceremony at the altar lighted with candelabra and decorated with vases of white gladioli.

Miss Margaret Benzler of Britt played nuptial music on the organ and accompanied Miss Juliene Adelsman of Mason City who played violin, and Merwel Williams of Mason City who sang "At Dawning," and "The Lord's Prayer."

The bride wore a dress of white slipper satin, over skirt of illusion, lace yoke, long pointed sleeves and veil of illusion. Her bouquet was of baby's breath and red roses.

The maid of honor, Miss Beverly Beier, and the bridesmaids, the Misses Sylvia Egeland and LaNelle Harvey, wore dresses of pale green taffeta with lace yokes and net covered, and Juliette caps of white lace. Miss Beier's corsage was pink carnations and the bridesmaids' corsages were yellow carnations.

Candle lighters were Margaret Haefner, who wore a white organdy dress over green taffetta; and Dennis Haefner. Ushers were Marvin Schmidt and Morris Buckley. June Haefner, the flower girl, wore a long white organdy dress.

Best Man was Dean Jacobs and attendants of the bridegroom were Edward Grosshuesch and Erwin Ausborn.

An intensive safety campaign to reduce the toll of accidents among Iowa farm residents is planned by the Farm Safety committee of the Iowa Safety Congress in the statewide observance of National Farm Safety Week, July 22 to 28

J. S. Russel, editor, Des Moines Farm and Home Register, is chairman of the committee. Dr. Norval Wardle, farm safety specialist at Iowa State College, is secretary.

Other committee members are Merrill Gregory, managing editor, Wallace's Farmer; L. J. Keeney of Farmers Mutual Reinsurance Ass'n., Grinnell; Howard Hass, safety director, Iowa Farm Bureau Federation; and Kirk Fox, editor, Successful Farming

The week commencing July 22 was set aside as National Farm Safety Week by proclamation of President Truman. Iowans, as residents of America's greatest agricultural state, are urged to join in the observance by proclamation of Governor Beardsley.

Quoting from the Governor's proclamation, Russell said the purpose of the week is to "remove hazards . . . encourage safety on our farms."

Work kits are being sent to farm safety leaders by the Congress to aid in planning local activities. Cooperating with the Congress are the Extension Division of Iowa State College, Iowa 4-H Clubs and other interested organizations.

On Saturday, July 21, 50,000 4-H club boys and girls will conduct farm hazard hunts. Using red tags, they will mark danger spots on the farms and encourage farmers to correct them during Farm Safety Week.

Russell urged farm folks to "adopt safe practices in all activities—whether in the home, in the field, handling livestock, working with machinery or driving in highway traffic."

"Remember: Danger lurks on your farm," he warned. "Be alert—don't get hurt!"

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

If it had been a trap deliberately set, it could not have been more cunningly baited. The appearance of normal conditions was perfect, but the reality was terrible.

A farmer worked till after sundown in the fields of a neighbor. When he drove his tractor out onto the highway and headed home, it was quite dark.

But the farmer felt safe enough. He had only to go up one hill and down to be home, and he had a large, white light burning on the left rear of his tractor.

He, of course, knew the reality The driver who came over the hill a few minutes later could see only the appearance.

The driver saw a steady white light, apparently on the near left side of the highway, halfway down the hill.

He thought it was a "one-eyed" car coming up the hill toward him on the left, where it should be. He thought so until his headlights showed him the reality - a slow moving tractor toiling along directly ahead.

But by then the driver's over confident 60 miles an hour had brought him close to the appearance to avoid the reality

He laid down 70 feet of skid marks and felt the steering wheel break under his chest. The farmer died in a ditch.

A red lens over the light would have made all the difference between appearance and reality - between life and death.

OBITUARY OF MRS. FRED BECKER

Mrs. Fred Becker, nee Elsie Emma Josten, whose earthly departure is deeply regretted and sorrowfully mourned by her loved ones, acquaintances and friends, was born on May 11, 1897 in Twin Lake Township, near Klemme on what is now the Edwin Josten farm. She was the second child and only daughter of Valentine and Emelia nee Priebe Josten. As a youth she attended the rural school in Twin Lake Township. After having been systematically instructed in the doctrines and precepts of the Christian faith she was received into the fellowship of Immanuel Reformed Church through the rite of Christian Confirmation on Sunday, May 19, 1912 by Pastor William R. Thiel.

During the first World War, Mrs. Becker was employed in the town of Klemme for a period of three years. During this time she served as a clerk in the Waterman Store and as an assistant in the Post Office.

On June 3, 1920 she was united in the bonds of Holy Marriage with Mr. Fred Becker at the home of the bride's parents by the Rev. August Depping The Lord in His providence blessed this union with one daughter, Irene. Mr. and Mrs. Becker established their home on their farm east of Klemme where they farmed for twenty-four years. Upon retirement from farming, Mr. and Mrs. Becker moved to Klemme where they resided for five years and then moved to their home and acreage south of Clear Lake.

Mrs. Becker was a member of Immanuel Evangelical and Reformed Church and prior to the failure of her health attended the divine worship services and partook of the sacrament of Holy Communion with regularity She was also a very active member of the Women's Guild and at one time she served as president. She was also an active member of the Sunday School.

Mrs. Becker has been ailing quite seriously since the Christmas season of 1950 and during the weeks and months of failing health and bodily ailment she maintained a cheerful disposition and hopeful spirit that was inspiring to those who visited with her She was not found to complain or to become embittered and she found constant strength and hope through an unfailing faith in our Heavenly Father as revealed in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Mrs. Becker was taken to the University Hospital in Iowa City, Iowa for surgery and treatment and it was there that she departed from this earthly life on the morning of Tuesday, July 10 having attained the age of 54 years and two months.

Those who survive her are her deeply bereaved husband, Mr. Fred Becker, her daughter Irene and son-in-law Cecil Katter, two grandsons, Lynn and Noel Katter and one brother Edwin Josten of Klemme, as well as a host of more distant relatives and dear friends.

"Into thine hand I commit my spirit: thou has redeemed me, O Lord God of truth." Psalm 31:5.

KATHLEEN NORRIS
Proud Hypocrite

"WHEN LIL and I were first married we had a lot of fun," writes a 34-year-old husband from Wichita. "We danced, we had a gang of pals, we had wedding present checks to fix us up in a nice place, and, darn it," Carter Neill goes on youthfully, "Lil wore pretty things, we went off for summer week-ends, well—we had fun! It makes me mad to look at the old snapshots in her books. Swimming, tennis, weeny roasts, beaches, and the rest.

"Now it's nine years since we've had any of that. I make twice as much money, but we never have a cent. Do you want to know the reason? I'll tell you. It's Babby, 9, Tom, 8, Patricia and Penelope, 5, Gary, 3 and Kittens, 1. Yessir, we have six of 'em. Twenty-four meals a day, how's that? And enough cookies and chocolate bars and potato chips in between meals to set up a grocery.

"Last winter we had whooping cough in November, and the coughs stopped at Easter. We thought we were going to lose Penny. Lil has a washing machine, bought with some of the thousand her father left her, and Babby's a swell help. But my kick is that there is never a moment of peace in this house If it isn't yelling from Kittens, it's Patsy and Pen tearing things to pieces, Tom crying because he doesn't like his teacher, everyone asking if he or she mayn't have a pal overnight or go somewhere overnight. The big ones think we spoil the little ones, and the little ones raise the roof if the big ones are going to a Saturday movie without them.

By the Book

"I bought a book," this harassed parent continues, "about how to raise children the modern way Well, Lil and I simply can't handle that. We don't go in for inhibitions and complexes. When Tom brought a $5 bill from school and said he found it, I took it back, and Tom got whaled When Babby set up a martyr complex and said she would not go to a party in her old dress, Lil told her that was all right, she needn't go. She went, by the way; I took her. And she was the prettiest kid there.

"We have a good-sized place, fruit trees, and a shed I'm going to turn into a theater for them someday. They're good kids, too. But sometimes I think I'd like just a few weeks of the old freedom and the old fun, and to see Lil when she isn't possessed by anxiety for one or the other of the kids. What's life worth if you have to spend every cent you make for shoes, pancakes, cough medicine and didy dolls?"

The writer of this letter, Carter Neill, is a hypocrite, and I think I would love him. He is bursting with pride in his four adorable little girls and his two sons, as what sane man wouldn't be? But maybe he was tired on the Sunday morning when he wrote me, and maybe the youngsters were raising the roof, and maybe it was raining.

Most Important Job

Carter and Lil Neill have engaged in the most important business in the world Of course it's a tiring and expensive and nerve-racking job, what else could it be? Of course it takes every bit of money they have, and the money is the least of it.

But what a harvest they'll reap as these babies grow into lovely youth, and they have girls and boys in the house, turning to them, helping them paying them back hours of happiness for every one of today's minutes of care.

Growing up is a painful business. But if every couple who married saw marriage as a time of growing up, a chance to be better and stronger and less selfish in the new life, what a world we'd have! There are a great many vocations and employments for women today, but Lil has the best of them.

Years of rest are ahead for Lil and Carter. And what will be one of the heartaches of those years? Why, looking back to just such mornings as the one on which Carter wrote me his good-natured, tongue-in-the-cheek complaint.

He and Lil will turn over the photograph albums then with a longing backward look at the days when they brought Kittens home from the hospital and Tom broke his leg and Penny strolled away and was lost all day.

If anything in life is worth while. the nursery is worth while. If anything in life fills the hearts of a man and woman with a joy that no other earthly sensation touches, it's when their children are about them and the line of little faces looks up grinning over its oatmeal. Carter knows he is lucky.

Teen-Agers Will Enjoy these Hashburgers
(See Recipes Below)

Teen-Age Favorites

IF YOU WANT to get in solid with the teen-age set, let them have a party or picnic of their own. This type of party is so easy to manage, especially when you plan the simple, hearty fare they like and can put together by themselves.

"Burgers", naturally, are a favorite. Tossed salads or cole slaw, French fried potatoes or potato chips, relishes, and calorie-full desserts will satisfy easily:

(Serves 3-4)

Open one can of corned beef hash from both ends and push the contents out in one piece. Cut into three or four slices and "rough" the top of each patty with the tines of a fork. Arrange on broiler rack. Broil three inches from heat source for about 8 minutes. Or, bake in a moderate (350°F.) oven for about 20 minutes. Serve atop a toasted bun and garnish with a pickle fan. (Make fans by cutting sweet pickles into several strips from the small end to within one-half inch of the larger end; spread apart like a fan.)

A GOOD CABBAGE salad with zippy mustard added to the dressing and contrasted with pineapple chunks makes an excellent combination with hashburgers:

Pineapple Chunk Coleslaw
(Serves 6)

- 1 No. 2 can Hawaiian pineapple chunks
- ½ cup mayonnaise
- ¼ cup sirup drained from pineapple
- 2 teaspoons prepared mustard
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon grated onion
- Dash cayenne pepper
- 4 cups shredded cabbage

Chill and drain pineapple chunks. Combine mayonnaise, pineapple sirup, mustard, salt, grated onion, and cayenne pepper. Blend thoroughly. Add dressing and pineapple chunks to cabbage; toss lightly. serve in outer leaves of cabbage or on salad greens.

(Makes 12 buns)

- 1 pound big bologna
- ¾ pound sharp American cheese
- ¼ cup prepared mustard
- ½ cup salad dressing or mayonnaise
- 1 tablespoon minced onion
- 2 tablespoons chopped sweet pickle

Grind bologna and cheese. Add remaining ingredients and mix well. Cut frankfurter buns in half; spread with butter, then filling. Wrap each bun in aluminum foil or waxed paper. Heat in slow oven (325°F.) 25 minutes.

Stuffed Frankfurters
(Serves 8)

- 8 frankfurters
- Prepared mustard
- 2 cups well-seasoned, mashed potatoes

Teen-Agers' Party Menu
*Hashburgers Deluxe
*Pineapple Coleslaw, Potato Chips
Chocolate Milk Shakes
*Mint-Chip Ice Cream Brownies
*Recipes Given

- ¼ cup minced onion
- 1 to 2 tablespoons chopped canned pimiento
- ¼ cup chopped parsley

Pour boiling water over frankfurters; cover; let stand 8 minutes. Split lengthwise. Spread with mustard. Combine remaining ingredients; blend; stuff frankfurters with mixture. Brown lightly in broiler or oven.

(Serves 6-8)

These Flavorsome Tips Enhance Summer Meals

Put your scallops on skewers, alternating with bacon and broil them for a quick supper The scallops should be dipped in salad oil and bread crumbs before skewering.

Cream the remainder of the roast chicken, and add an egg yolk or two to the sauce. Serve over thin slices of ham with sauteed mushrooms. A nice but simple supper!

Tiny carrots from the garden make up into an excellent baked vegetable. Slice very thin, cover with thin white sauce, grated cheese and bread crumbs. Bake until tender; it won't take long.

Deviled chicken? Yes, indeed. Dip the pieces in egg, bread crumbs, then again and again. Sprinkle lightly with dry mustard and broil until golden and tender.

Fill those big Spanish onions with creamed mushrooms and bake: they'll be good with ham, pork or turkey.

Malik's Korean Peace Proposal Causing World-Wide Speculation

THE TIMING WAS PERFECT—Whether or not Russia's Jacob A. Malik was sincere in his proposed cease-fire in Korea is a question that only time will answer, but of one thing the people in the home towns of America were sure—the timing was perfect.

The average man in the small towns of the country has a sincere desire for peace. He is sure of a number of things: (1) U S. casualties now number 73,600 and he wants his sons and brothers home; (2) The war has strained the nation's bipartisan foreign policy and threatens to cause an even more serious internal split; (3) and the war has increased the dangers of inflation throughout the western world.

Perhaps the Russians realized these facts and picked the first anniversary of the start of the Korean war for their peace move. But the move was unusual in that Malik made no reference to any of the Korean peace conditions previously set by the Soviet bloc: a deal on Formosa, admission of Communist China to the United Nations, and withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea. It could be that the Soviet is sincere. But it could also be that the Soviet recognized the great propaganda potentialities of a peace move at this time.

The Silent Enemy

Rain and mud have taken over the battlefields of Korea as the silent enemy of the foot soldiers. And while peace rumors circulate throughout the world, the fighting and dying goes on.

The home towners of the nation would do well to remember, however, that Russia is not officially in the war. The next step is up to the Chinese Communists. If the Chinese, who have made no comment on Malik's proposition, indicate what he said actually reflects a change in their Korean policy and a desire to end the fighting, then the man on Main Street can allow himself to hope for peace.

However, if the Chinese ignore the whole business, or restate their earlier demands for U.N. membership and control of Formosa, as the price for a Korean settlement, then the suspicion that Malik was more interested in making propaganda than in making peace will be confirmed.

The U.S. state department has indicated a willingness to play its part in bringing an end to the hostilities in Korea if Malik's offer "is more than propaganda." But until there is some concrete evidence of sincerity in the proposal the U.S. will act with caution.

At the moment that seems the only sensible attitude to adopt. It is one the home towners may find best to follow.

THE BALANCE SHEET—As the first year of conflict ended in Korea, the fighting was as bloody and dirty as the day it began. But the balance sheet would indicate the Communists have lost the first round in their planned aggression.

On the credit side of the ledger: (1) The first U.N. battle force was raised and integrated in the initial bloody weeks; (2) the U.S and her allies were dynamited into world-wide alertness and rearmament; (3) American military forces have learned valuable military lessons, developed new techniques, and tested much of the enemy's strategy; (4) the west has proved it will not abandon the small nations of Asia and Europe; and (5) the North Korean army has been mangled and the Chinese have had startling losses, estimated in all at 1,162,500 casualties.

On the other side of the ledger: (1) Allied casualties have been heavy for peaceful nations (approximately 352,500); (2) most of the west's military strength has been hobbled to a peninsula of secondary world-wide importance; (3) the Russians have lost only one known combat man in battle; (4) conflict has hastened the financial drain and made inflation more dangerous in the west; (5) Communists still retain the initiative, in Korea and throughout the world.

THE YEAR OF INFLATION—Since the Korean war began on June 25, 1950, livestock prices in this country have increased $3 to $10 a hundred pounds. At the same time, livestock production was much greater during the past 12 months than the preceding twelve.

A year ago hogs were no higher than $20.50. Today they are selling at $23.50, and last summer went to $25.50 a hundred pounds.

The cattle trade is about $6 a hundred pounds higher than a year ago although production ran 20 per cent above the 12 months preceding the start of the war. When the war broke out, steers were selling downward from $31.50. Currently they are topping at $38.50.

Sheep and lamb production has changed slightly, but prices have developed much higher. Best lambs are about $34.50 now, down from $42.50 in March, but compared with $28.50 a year ago. Ewes are topping at $17.50 now, down from 25 in February, compared with $10.50 a year ago.

The Home Front Battle

On the home front the battle to keep down prices was the issue of special groups. The CIO entered the fray by launching a drive for tighter anti-inflation controls.

RECORD-BREAKING TAX—By a vote of 233 to 160, the house approved a record-breaking $7,200,000,000 tax increase, including a 12½ per cent boost in individual income taxes.

The measure is now before the senate where the finance committee is holding hearings. The senate is expected to approve the bill, possibly with a few minor changes

Here is where the government would collect the additional money; Individuals, $2,847,000,000; corporate income and excess profits taxes, $2,855,000,000; excise taxes, $1,252,000,000; and miscellaneous changes in the revenue laws, $245,000,000.

PARIS TALKS END—After 16 weeks of futile talks, the deputy foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, France and Russia broke off their efforts to write a program of a big four conference to ease world tension.

But they left the door open for their governments to make one last attempt to arrange a meeting of the big four foreign ministers, which has been suggested for July 23 in Washington.

No one in the diplomatic world believed that the Russians would accept the invitation.

STARTLING EXPERIMENT

Spray Keeps Vegetables Fresh a Year

Results of experiments with a new spray — meleic hydrazide — which keeps potatoes, onions and several other vegetables fresh for a year or more, was reported by The Country Gentleman.

The spray arrests growth. Growth is so slow after spraying that the vegetables fail even to die at the rapid rate normal during storage. Every living process seems slowed down. Flavor and firmness are retained for a long time, apparently for about a year.

Scientists reported experiments were so successful they "could hardly believe them possible." Crops are sprayed before gathering. The spray does not affect the yield. It has been used successfully on potatoes, onions, carrots, beets, parsnips and turnips.

The Hearing Ends

WITH THE MacArthur hearing brought to an abrupt close, many Democrats and Republicans believe the result of the millions of words of testimony is a net approval of President Truman's ouster of his far east commander.

As pointed out in this column several weeks ago, the investigation turned into a political tug-of-war. Despite the many witnesses and the voluminous testimony, not a single mind was changed insofar as the congress was concerned.

There is little question that President Truman had the authority to remove MacArthur; that the general did disobey the orders of his superiors; and that he was so far out of step with the policy of his government that he could not be trusted further to carry out the orders of the chiefs of staff and the commander-in-chief.

The man who was supposed to bolster the MacArthur viewpoint was Lt. Gen. Albert Wedemeyer. While he did uphold MacArthur on many points, he nullified part of his testimony when Sen. John J. Sparkman asked: "General, in case of a disagreement between a field commander (Gen. MacArthur) and the joint chiefs, to whom should we look for guidance?"

Wedemeyer answered: "The joint chiefs of staff without question, sir."

Political Implications

There are two new political implications in the MacArthur controversy. (1) The general, in his last Texas appearance, made what has been called a political speech attacking the Truman administration on domestic policies; (2) Sen. Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin, attempting to regain the initiative in the MacArthur controversy, made a particularly vicious attack on Gen. George C. Marshall.

The Washington Evening Star had this to say about McCarthy's attack on Marshall: "It is a shame that the senate should be used for such monstrous effort at character assassination, and it is a greater shame that not one of Senator McCarthy's Republican colleagues saw fit to stand up and denounce him. It is impossible to believe, however, that this attempt to destroy General Marshall with the "big-lie" technique will succeed. Some Americans have swallowed a lot of Senator McCarthy's rantings. But this is too big a dose for any one in his right mind to swallow."

Senators Walk Out

Although the senators walked out on McCarthy, and even the gallery emptied, three Republicans sat through his speech, which called General Marshall a traitor, and applauded. They were Wherry, the Republican minority leader, Lagar of North Dakota, and Hendrickson of New Jersey.

Here is how one Republican senator viewed the new low in McCarthyism. Said Sen. William Jenner of Indiana: "I am glad he (McCarthy) did it. It makes me look better."

Await Taft Comment

Many are wondering what Senator Taft of Ohio might have to say, if anything, about the McCarthy smear of General Marshall.

It is believed that Taft will open his campaign for the GOP presidential nomination in Maine in August. It will be remembered on one previous occasion, when McCarthy was making his unsubstantiated charges against Secretary of State Dean Acheson and the state department, Taft was quoted by the Associated Press as telling McCarthy to keep on making charges and that "if one case didn't work to bring up others."

Washington Rumor

There is an interesting story making the rounds of Washington. For what it is worth, it goes like this:

Col. Robert McCormick of the Chicago Tribune and Washington Times-Herald, had made a deal to back Senator Taft for the GOP presidential nomination, and Congressman Dirksen of Illinois for Vice President. Now, however, taking advantage of the MacArthur controversy, he is running the 71-year-old general as a full-fledged candidate for president. The story is he has obtained an agreement from Senator Taft to take the second spot on the ticket. It is hard to believe that even for support of the powerful Chicago Tribune Senator Taft would enter into any such agreement.

More Reds Arrested

The series of F.B.I. dawn raids, netting 17 Communist officials, is another indication of the government's determination to keep the party under control.

The government charged the 17 with plotting to wage an underground campaign to overthrow the United States government by violence.

They were among 21 Communists slated to take over control of the party when 11 convicted Red leaders go to jail.

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Ink stains on rugs, like practically all stains on practically everything, are easiest to handle if they're handled immediately. Pour fresh milk on the stain as soon as it happens, then mop it up. Cover the spot with cornstarch for a few minutes, run the vacuum cleaner over it, and wash the spot with mild soap and water.

New concrete can be laid successfully right on top of an old concrete surface, but be sure, first, to get the old surface perfectly clean with soap and water and have it thoroughly wet when the new concrete is applied.

On summer fiber rugs, oil stains can be removed easily with cleaning fluid. However, they'll show up again, because the fluid removes only the oil on the surface of the fiber. The oil that's been absorbed will be pressed to the surface by traffic. As the stains keep reappearing, keep removing them with cleaning fluid; and eventually all the oil will be gone.

If you can't get to an ink spot on rug immediately, mix up a workable paste of milk and corn meal. Cover the spot liberally with the paste and let it stay twelve hours or, at least, overnight before sweeping it up.

If a concrete floor starts to get powdery—or, if you just want to give it a finished look—try this: Wash the surface thoroughly with soap and water; then apply boiled linseed oil liberally with a paint brush. After two days, wash the floor again, and give it another dose of boiled linseed oil. A third treatment may be necessary in two days. The same result can be achieved by the same method if you use "waterglass" solution instead of linseed oil.

Oil spots on concrete can often be removed with cleaning fluid. If the spots are old, though, mix up a paste of cleaning fluid and fuller's earth. Spread the paste on the spots and wait until it's completely dry before sweeping it off with a broom.

Selecting A Water Heater

QUESTION: I'm contemplating buying a water heater. My water supply has a high lime content and I'd like to know if lime will collect on the walls of a glass-lined heater. I don't know whether to buy a water softener or not. If I can get a satisfactory length of service with a glass lined tank, minus a softener, it will mean a real saving for me. Glass lined tanks are guaranteed against rust and corrosion, but I wonder if the same holds true when there is lime in the water.

ANSWER: The lime would be less likely to stick to a glass lining than it would to a rough metal surface. It sounds like a good investment to me, Regarding a water softener, I believe you have the wrong idea as to the cost of of these units. The Architects Samples Exhibi, 101 Park Ave., New York 17, can furnish you with names of manufacturers and you may find that the price of a good one would not be at all excessive.

Saturday Night Variety Stage Show Was Big Success

The Saturday night amateur stage show, directed by Ernie Gerardi proved to be a very popular entertainment which was staged to take the place of the regular Saturday evening band concert. The band did not play last week as Director Whitford was on his vacation.

So popular was the special feature that many people expressed their wish that we could have more of them. Perhaps it might be possible to stage another show at the close of the band season.

Mr. Gerardi and his amateurs did a swell job and are to be complimented. If you liked the show, tell, Ernie and the young people who helped put on the entertainment.

WET SOIL HAMPERS ROAD CONSTRUCTION IN HANCOCK CO.

A total of 12.76 inches of rain since June 1 has seriously hampered grading contractors in Hancock County in the construction of new roads and in some instances contractors have suspended operations until soil becomes drier.

Unless drier weather arrives soon it is doubtful that all contracts can be completed this year, according to a report from the office of County Engineer C. F. Merten.

Bridges that were damaged by recent floods are rapidly being repaired and the Maudlin Construction company recently began its contract for surfacing certain county roads with gravel.

MOW YOUR PERMANENT PASTURES FOR WEEDS

Henderson noticed a farmer in Orthel Township Friday the 13th of July mowing a permanent pasture to control the ordinary weeds we find in permanent pastures. This is a very much recommended practice. Weed control increases the feed in a pasture and will also prevent much weed growth in '52 because it controls weed seed production.

SET ASIDE JULY 22-28 AS FARM SAFETY WEEK

Presidential and gubernatorial proclamations have spotlighted Iowa observance of National Farm Safety Week, July 22-28.

These proclamations urge the farm people of the state and nation to give special attention to preventing accidents that take a heavy annual toll in lives, personal injuries and dollars in medical bills and time lost from work. In Iowa emphasis will be placed on eliminating the causes before the accidents happen, according to Norval Wardle, extension safety specialist at Iowa State College.

Members of many 4-H clubs will take part in the week's activities, starting with a hazard hunt on July 21, the day before Farm Safety Week begins, Wardle says. Armed with hazards lists and red tags, these young people will inspect farms and farmsteads. They will hunt down the hazards and mark them with special red tags.

During the safety week campaign, farm people will be urged to remove the hazards that the 4-H members have tagged. And where there is an accident hazard that can't be removed, the red tag will serve to caution anyone who works around it.

The Farm Safety section of the Iowa Safety Congress and radio station WHO, Des Moines, are again sponsoring a contest for essays on experiences in removing accident hazards. Entries may be sent either to the radio station or to Norval Wardle, Iowa State College, Ames. Twenty-two winning essays will be announced on the final day of Farm Safety Week, July 28, on WHO's Corn Belt Farm Hour.

DON'T GAMBLE DURING

FARM SAFETY WEEK

JULY 22-28 - -

Play Safe! Check all hazards around your farm and try to have them corrected.

As a great many farm accidents are caused directly from farm machinery . . . be sure to check all your machinery closely. If guards are missing, replace them. They are for YOUR protection.

Be extra cautious when working near belts and drive shafts. Have these shielded if at all possible. It may save a life.

Inspect your farm buildings for such things as exposed electrical wires that might cause fire or shock. Pick up tools around the yard which might trip you and injure you. Nail down all loose floor boards. Make Farm Safety Week a fix-up week for YOUR own protection.

RESOLUTION ANNEXING LANDS HEREAFTER DESCRIBED

WHEREAS, Drainage District No. 13 and Lateral No. 7 thereof was heretofore legally and duly established by the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa, and

WHEREAS, Henry J. Askland, Harvey A. Sorenson, J. L. Tomkins and W D White did on December 30, 1949 and on June 7, 1951 file in the office of the Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa their petition in which they waived notice of hearing requesting that their respective lands be included in said Drianage District No. 13, and that they be given an outlet into an open ditch and tile system of said District, and

GARNER SADDLE CLUB WILL HOLD BENEFIT SHOW SUN., JULY 22

A horse and pony show will be held by the Garner Saddle club on its show grounds ½ mile west of Garner, Sunday, July 22 for the benefit of a storm-stricken farm family of near Duncan.

The hour is 1.30 p.m. The show grounds are located between the "old pavement" and the Milwaukee tracks near the viadict.

The show will include ten big events, including square-dancing by a Hancock county Rural Young People's group. Admission is 50 cents for adults and 15 cents for children.

In case of rain, the event will be held Sunday, July 29.

This is not to be regarded as the Garner Saddle club's annual horse and pony show, club officers emphasize.

The Galen Hauge family, for whom the show is to be held, lost almost all of their possessions in the June 25 tornado. One of the casualties was the Hauge saddle horse, one of the finest in this part of the state.

EXTENSION SPECIALISTS HELP TORNADO VICTIMS

Five extension specialists from the Iowa State College Extension Service met with a group of farm couples who suffered building loss in the June 25th tornado. One contractor and three lumber dealers also attended. The specialists gave personal assistance on farmstead planning, building arrangement, windbreak plantings plans for individual structures such as the house and all of the farm buildings.

The specialists assisted Paul Henderson and Elsie Mae Van-Wert, county extension workers. They stressed simplicity in buildings and labor saving arrangements in doing the daily tasks around the farm.

Miss Naoma Shank helped discuss house plans. Dale Hull, Carroll Whorlan and a representative of the plywood institute worked with the families on barns, grain storage, hog & poultry housing. John Fitzsimmons & Miss Margretta Tar discussed building arrangement, windbreaks and shrub plantings.

Plans are still available at county extension office according to Henderson. He suggests that all people building today be sure they analyze present day farming methods and build to fit the type of farming we do today and avoid building the same type of buildings that were constructed for horse farming. He believes these structures should be put up so they can be cleaned mechanically, and he reminds us that we are having many new methods of storing grain and hay. Keep these changes upermost in your planting. Re-build for the future not the past.

FIRST SHORT COURSE FOR LUMBERMEN JULY 26

Iowa lumber dealers are scheduled to meet at Iowa State College July 26 and 27 for the first Lumbermen's Short Course to be held on the Iowa State campus.

The short course is being sponsored by the Iowa Lumbermen's Association and the Consumers' Cooperative Association in cooperation with the college. Its purpose is to help promote the construction of better buildings on farms in the state. It is felt by all three of the sponsoring organizations that lumber dealers can provide valuable assistance to farmers because they are often contacted first when a farmer has a building problem.

Emphasis during the first day of the short course will be on the farm home. The needs of a farm house and how they differ from those of a house in town will be discussed. Findings of a survey of farms in the north central region will be presented in an effort to point out what kind of houses farm families want. Other topics on the program point up the importance of applying human engineering to farm house plans, and a comparison of homes with and without basements.

Farm buildings, there trends, functions, alternate uses, design and construction will be highlighted during the second day. Discussions will include grain storage buildings, barns, machine sheds, and structures for storing machines.

Pre-registration is now being handled by the Agricultural Engineering Department of the college. The registration fee is $5.00.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT

Mr. and Mrs. Art Polsdofer announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter Dorothy LaVonne to Robert Hiscocks, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hiscocks, Sr. of Britt. The wedding will take place July 22.

GOV. LOANS ON CORN MAY BE EXTENDED

Government loans on 1949-crop corn may be extended and the corn resealed for another year, according to A. E. Rasmussen, chairman of the county Production and Marketing Administration Committee. This would make the new maturity date for such loans July 31, 1952, or earlier on demand. The 1949 loans were extended last year to mature on July 31, 1951.

This action reverses an earlier decision not to extend the loans, Mr. Rasmussen explained today. Retaining this corn under reseal loan for another year will alleviate shortages in off-farm storage space and will also ease the strain on transportation facilities.

Farmers will receive a storage fee of 20 cents per bushel if the resealed corn is delivered to the CCC at the end of the new loan period July 31, 1952. This includes the 10c per bushel already earned up to July 31, 1951 and additional 10c per bushel from July 31, to July 31, 1952.

To obtain extension of the 1949-crop corn loans, farmers must apply to their PMA county committee before the final date specified in delivery instructions.

Loans are outstanding on about 30 million bushels of 1949-crop corn in Iowa and on about 57 million bushels for the nation as a whole

4-H'ERS PLAN FARM HAZARD HUNTS

Hancock County 4-H clubs will join with clubs in other parts of Iowa to help make the 1951 National Farm Safety Week, scheduled for July 22-28, more effective.

Proclamations of farm safety week have been issued by President Truman and Iowa Governor William Beardsley urging observance of the safety week program. Activities planned by the 4-H clubs will focus attention on members' home farms.

During the months of July and August, 4-H members will stage hazard hunts at home. They will search out possible causes of accidents and will mark the most dangerous hazards with special red tags. Once the hazards are found, the members will work with their parents to remove the hazards they have found. Before the month of August is over, the 4-H members will have found and removed hundreds of hazards.

BUTTER!

World-famous chefs know there's nothing to match butter! It makes so many foods taste better. As an ingredient in cooking or baking, it helps to insure flavor-perfection. Butter adds nutrition, too. Its natural golden color comes from rich golden cream—since four pints of cream go into the making of each pound of butter.

For nutrition, for health, for downright goodness, there's nothing finer than the high-score Iowa butter for which our creamery has built such a reputation. Use butter generously in cooking, and at every meal.

SYNTHETIC BLOOD EXTENDER

PVP-Macrose May Solve Nation's Need for Synthetic Blood Plasma

One of the biggest headaches of civil defense—how to stockpile blood for disaster use—is on the way to being eased by science.

Facilities have been set up to mass-produce a synthetic "blood extender," a chemical fluid that can be used in place of whole blood or plasma in certain types of treatment.

The product is PVP-Macrose, or polyvinyl pyrrolidone. It could be a major aid in caring for shock resulting from burns or wounds, and

Orders have been placed by Schenley Laboratories, Inc., for sufficient material to make 7,000,000 pints of the product. The firm is geared to bottle PVP at a rate of 300,000 pints per month.

Ten thousand bottles of PVP have been turned over to the National Research Council, which is evaluating it for use by the armed forces and other government agencies. Under NRC direction, tests on the product have been under way since shortly after January 1 at more than 20 hospitals and research laboratories throughout the country.

First supplies of "radio-active" PVP, useful in studying the chemical's behavior in the body, are being distributed to research scientists.

THIS "BLOOD EXTENDER," however, cannot duplicate all the physiological functions of human plasma. As a result, availability of a PVP stockpile in this country will not affect the need for whole blood or plasma. These advantages were listed for PVP:

1. It is completely synthetic, can be made in unlimited quantities, is not dependent on healthy human donors, can be stockpiled indefinitely.

2. It does not require refrigeration or blood typing and its administration is free from allergic reaction in the body.

3. It can be produced at a fraction of the cost of blood or derivatives of blood.

4. It is ideally suited for disaster use.

PVP-Macrose is known as Periston in Germany, where it first was discovered in 1939 and subsequently was used on 500,000 German battle casualties in World War II. Schenley Laboratories is importing the intermediate-stage material from the western zone of Germany, under contract agreement. It is expected that a U.S. source of supply of the intermediate-stage material will be available this year.

Medical authorities estimate that the needs for plasma or "blood extenders" would run as high as 4,000,000 pints if a single atom bomb struck a major metropolitan center. The nation's ordinary peacetime needs alone for blood are about 4,500,000 pints a year. During the entire World War II period less than 14,000,000 pints of whole blood were collected.

then returned to the stage. "Portrait of Jennie" was his first film, then came "Adam's Rib". That role as the murderer in "M" was just what he had been looking for, and some folks say that his performance is one of the best dramatic jobs ever to come out of Hollywood.

John Wayne, not content with being No. 1 box office star, has conferred with Mexican officials on plans for filming "The Alamo", with himself as star, producer and director. He is now in Ireland, working in "The Quiet Man", which John Ford is directing. Maureen O'Hara, Mildred Natwick, Barry Fitzgerald, Ward Bond, and Arthur Shields appear with him.

Republic Pictures lists "The Quiet Man" as one of 12 of its new films; they all sound good. Richard Tregaskis, the war correspondent, went to Indonesia to do research for "Fair Wind to Java": "Hoodlum Empire" will be based on Bob Considine's racketeering expose and the Kefauver committee hearings. "Iron Master" tells of the discovery of iron ore in Minnesota.

MUMPS—KEEP OUT

By Paul Tulien

HIGH UP in the apple tree ten-year-old Tommy Thorne pondered on the ways of women. Why did his sister Winifred prefer George Butler when she could have a swell guy like Frank Stanton? Why was she goint to the ball game in town tonight with George after she had turned down Frank?

3-Minute Fiction

It didn't make sense.

Next year probably she and George would be married. Now, had it been Frank it would be something to look forward to.

It would be fun if he could think of some way to scare George when he came tonight. Not that it would change Winifred's opinion of George, but it would be fun anyway.

Then he remembered a "MUMPS—KEEP OUT!" sign he had picked up in a trash dump a few months before. At the time he hadn't expected ever to put it to such a good use.

The more he thought about the idea the better he liked it. What would George do when he saw the sign on the front of the house? He bet the old fraidy-cat would leave in a hurry.

But he must be careful. He wished he knew exactly what time George would come. If he put up the sign too early, one of his own folks might see it before George came. And that, of course, would be the end of it. On the other hand if he waited too long George might come before the sign was up.

IN THE early dusk Tommy crouched behind a clump of bushes. Slowly the minutes dragged by. At last a car turned into the driveway. George Butler got out of the car, started for the house, stopped—and then hurriedly got into the car again and drove off. Tommy sprang up; his plan had worked perfectly, but he must not let Winifred see what he had done.

"So, Smartypants, I'll have to sit home tonight just because you must have your little joke!"

But he was too late. Winifred was staring at the sign tacked on the front of the house. He started to turn and run, but decided he might as well face the music now for she would get hold of him sooner or later.

"So, Smartypants, I'll have to sit home tonight and twiddle my thumbs just because you must have your little joke!"

Tommy was silent for a minute, twisting one leg around the other. "Maybe you could phone and explain—he'll pro'bly go home." The words came reluctantly for he didn't want Winifred to telephone, and if she did he hoped George wouldn't be home.

"I will NOT!" she cried hotly. "Not when he didn't care enough to see which of us was sick—why, I might be dying of mumps for all he knows—or cares!"

"People don't die of mumps, do they?"

"What difference does that make?" she retorted.

"It doesn't excuse him from asking. If he didn't dare to come to the door, he could have stood in the yard and yelled. Surely, I couldn't have thrown the mumps on him! Anyway, if I had the mumps he ought to be willing to have them too!"

It was almost too good to be true, Tommy thought. Only one thing was needed to make everything perfect and that would be for Frank to come.

And then Frank did come. He jumped out of his car and asked anxiously, "Who's sick?"

"No one. That sign's just Tommy's little joke," Winifred explained.

Frank laughed. "That's good! I just saw Jack Martin in town and he said he had seen a mumps sign on your house when he drove by. So I thought I'd come out and see if you needed any help. Say, why aren't you at the ball game?"

"How do you expect me to go? Walk? Our car's in the garage for repairs."

"Why, I thought— Well, you know I'd be awfully glad to take you in, if you care to go. And Tommy too—unless three's a crowd."

"Not when the third one's Tommy," Winifred said, putting her arm around the boy. "He did me an extra good turn tonight."

Enemies Call Average Thrifty Citizens 'Capitalists'

By Wright A. Patterson

WHO are the capitalists of America the communists and socialists howl about, and if it were possible, would destroy? Among them are the farmers, with large or small holdings. They are engaged in productive enterprises as individuals with investments in plants—their farms—and in tools—their farm implements.

Another element of the capitalist class are those owning rental properties, whether it be one small cottage or a considerable number of rental units that are providing homes for people.

Then there is that vastly larger number who are stockholders in business, large or small, and in transportation facilities. This class consists of many more than four million, all of them American capitalists. Among that four million are many thousands of workers, classed as both workers and capitalists.

This class of capitalists by its investments provides the tools of industry, and creates the 60 million jobs of America, as well as providing for their declining years; they do not have to depend on something for nothing for those years.

All together the capitalistic classes in America, including the several millions of life insurance policyholders, represent by far the larger portion of the 150 millions of American people. They are the people who make of America what America is. They are the people the socialists and communists seek to destroy by taking from them that which they have thriftily accumulated, and leaving for these thrifty Americans only a place on a park bench, where they, too, could hope for that something for nothing to be passed out by the government. The question today is: Do we want the socialists and the communists to succeed in their nefarious plans?

Those who would replace our American free enterprise system, that has made possible such a number of thrifty capitalists, whose combined investments have provided 60 million jobs, and give us instead the ideas or methods of socialism or communism, are not seeking the best interests of our America.

The free enterprise system does not provide something for nothing, but it does provide the ways and means of providing for ourselves as individuals if we are willing to make the needed effort and most of us are willing. Neither will socialism or communism, and they are much of the same kind, provide something for nothing.

The business institutions of the nation, both large and small, are making a real effort to impress upon the people that our free enterprise system is dangerously threatened.

I was reading today the 39th annual report of the Lumberman's Mutual Casualty company in which the president, James S. Kemper, devotes a chapter to that subject. In it he says: "The cunning of the Kremlin must be met by candor and courage in Washington, that men in the mass must be countered by an abiding faith that, with God's help, men are destined to be free. Private enterprise can and will provide right direction in America, and in so doing hold high the torch of liberty for the world to see."

Before the senate committee investigating the firing of MacArthur, Secretary of State Dean Acheson was a reluctant witness. He did not wish to talk about the mistakes, or worse, he had made in the far east, but the committee was insistent and out-voted him. Out of it all the people have learned the contents of the secretary's note to our diplomats in foreign nations, in which we wrote off Formosa as a part of our foreign policy. Acheson said that note was a phony.

As the politicians see it it is better to levy more taxes to provide for more unnecessary spendings, and it will be more profitable, in votes, than to reduce government payrolls and spend less.

—*—

The increasing profits of corporations the papers report are more than offset by the decreasing value of the dollars earned.

THE WASHINGTON Merry-Go-Round

BY...DREW PEARSON

Attack on Marshall

SENATE Democratic leaders called an emergency off-the-record huddle the other day to decide how to meet Senator McCarthy's 60,000-word attack on Secretary of Defense Marshall.

Minnesota's fiery Sen. Hubert Humphrey suggested a mass walkout when McCarthy got up to speak. Pointing out how Hitler started his rise to power by tearing down the heroes of the German republic, Humphrey snorted his disgust at McCarthy's tactics.

"There are many ways to destroy people—sometimes by outright murder, sometimes through the process of attrition," declared Humphrey. "I mean character assassination, misrepresentation and quoting out of context. This is the most inhumane way."

The senator from Minnesota suggested that the Democrats had only two alternatives—"either stand up and fight back which is almost impossible to do when McCarthy controls the floor, or remove ourselves from the scene of the unsavory conduct."

However, Sen. Lyndon Johnson of Texas favored sending in a conservative southern Democrat to hit back at McCarthy. Anyone else who tried it would be branded as a Communist by McCarthy, Johnson observed. He suggested George of Georgia or Byrd of Virginia, since Marshall lives in Virginia and Byrd made the original motion in favor of Marshall's nomination.

However, McMahon of Connecticut warned that it was an "impossibility trying to debate with McCarthy, because you never can pin him to the facts of the issue."

He added that Marshall had stature enough to withstand the McCarthy blast and suggested that the McCarthyites had lost the MacArthur fight, and McCarthy's attack on Marshall was "a deliberate attempt to gain the offensive again.

Serving Two Masters

The next government agency to get in hot water with congress may be the securities and exchange commission, which polices Wall Street and the big corporations.

The SEC is the only agency which has failed to answer a questionnaire, sent out by alert Pennsylvania Congressman Francis Walter, asking for the names of employees who had given up their government jobs to work for the same companies which they once regulated when they were government officials.

The manner in which some officials have used their government positions to do favors for private companies, then have gone to work for the same companies at higher salaries, is a national scandal.

Probable reason why the SEC is keeping silent is that the answers would be embarrassing. For example, SEC would have to tell how it reversed a recommendation to dissolve the United Corporation, after several former SEC employees were hired by United.

Organized by J. P. Morgan, United Corporation is a giant holding company which gives Wall Street bankers control over several power and electric companies. In 1942 the SEC staff recommended dissolving this parent corporation under the holding company act and on the grounds that it served no useful purpose except to perpetuate banker control.

However, the bankers turned round and hired several SEC officials, including some who had worked on the very recommendation to dissolve the United Corporation. First to move over to United was William M. Hickey, who had been assistant director of SEC's public utilities division. Suddenly in April, 1943, he became president of United Corporation.

In addition, John J. Burns, SEC counsel in the early days, became United's senior counsel; E. Carey Kennedy, ex-SEC analyst, became vice president of the company; and Edward Roll, formerly a minor SEC official became assistant to United's president.

Following this, the SEC strangely had a change of heart and did not dissolve the United Corporation. Last year, a new proceeding was initiated, but again the bankers resorted to the same tactics, and SEC's counsel in charge of the public utilities division legal staff, Harry Slater, overnight became assistant counsel of United's chief subsidiary.

The White House has received a report from Maury Maverick, ex-mayor of San Antonio, on the difficulty San Antonio's present mayor, Jack White, had in getting a reception committee to welcome General MacArthur. Lewis's rumored coal strike is after the miners go off on the midsummer vacation.

Community Living

Lesson for July 22, 1951

THERE is one way to get along in any neighborhood without any trouble at all: just have nothing to do with any one. But that is not only not a Christian way of living, it is not practicable.

Dr. Foreman

You need the community and the community needs you. If you want to tell the world goodbye, go rent yourself a room on the 17th floor of some apartment house in New York. You won't be bothered with callers! But if you live in the typical American town or country community, you not only cannot help knowing everybody more or less, but you want to know them.

The Community Includes Everybody

SOME communities cease to be communities and become exclusive clubs; no strangers can break in. A lady in a very old county in a long-settled state, said of her next-door neighbor: "That family came here sixty years ago; they don't really belong here."

Now a true community ought to include every one in it, and it isn't a real community until it does. Jesus' parable of the sheep and the goats suggests this.

The trouble with the "goats" was that they just never saw the down-and-out members of the community at all. Your own neighborhood has in it, perhaps, some lonely people, unfortunate people, some human left-overs. What is the community doing for them?

The Church and Its Own

ONE practical thing that Christians can do for their communities is to see to it that no Christian suffers want. However much we may disagree with the Mormons, there is one feature of the Mormon church which the rest of us might take to heart: in all the depression of 20 years ago, there never was a Mormon on relief.

Probably in most small communities the separate congregations are not large enough to do this kind of thing effectively; but surely in a community where there are as many as three or four different denominations, they might all plan together so that whenever any Christian got into a strait, the rest of the Christians would stand by to help him.

There will always be a need for general organizations such as the Red Cross or the Grange and the Community Chest; but if Christians always stood by Christians, the rest of the community would at least have less to worry about.

It Takes All Kinds

THE ideal community is one in which everybody is a Christian and indeed all belong to the same church. But such communities are few and far between. Most of us live pretty close—and sometimes uncomfortably close—to people who are not Christians, except perhaps in name, and who may be hard to get along with.

How can we live with such people in a Christian way? Paul, in Romans 12, makes some practical suggestions. He knew very well that no city or town in the Roman Empire was Christian or anywhere near it; yet he shows how to have the Christian spirit never-the-less.

Christians should be the most valuable members of any community. But are they? Is this true in your community? If so, what is it that the Christians contribute? And if not, is it maybe the Christians' fault?

The Law Above Laws

A group of people who act toward each other in no better way than the laws of the land require, may be a neighborhood but it is no community.

The laws (and useful they are, to be sure) can regulate our behavior, but they cannot touch our hearts. They can forbid us to harm our neighbor, but they cannot force us to feel kindly towards him. For complete community, something more than law is necessary; and again Paul puts us on the track of it.

Love is above all law; it does not break laws but it goes far beyond them. It is not the law-abiding citizens who are the best ones; the true ornaments and treasures, the First Citizens of a community, are the love-abiding.

He was one of many who died attempting to halt advance of U.N. tank forces along the narrow road. MINIATURE HOBBY . . . If this picture had been made by trick photography, it might be said that the gentleman was well-heeled, loaded, or flush, as you choose. But it's no trick—the greenbacks are miniatures. Man with the hobby is William J Nordvedt, who collects miniatures of all descriptions. A guard at the Smithsonian Institute, Nordvedt also owns busts of Washington and Lincoln on pinheads, a 1½-inch violin, plus many other interesting items in the smaller sizes.

BUSIEST BRITISHER . . . Busiest man in Britain these days is James Hankins, one-armed decorator. Despite loss of arm in World War I, he looks after profitable business, can paint and hang paper "faster and better" than most.

MUD BATH BALLERINA . . . Sure, it's an old trick, but they still do it just the same. Stuff pictured is not supposed to be ordinary m-u-d, but hot natural tule m-u-d at Guenther's Murietta Hot Springs in Southern California. Mussed-up miss is Joan Whitney, 20-year-old actress and model, who bathes (?) in the mud and takes hot mineral baths to keep trim. Miss Whitney had part in the Hope movie, "My Favorite Spy," is now modeling in Paris.

CHARGES APPEASEMENT . . . Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, ex-ambassador to China, as he appeared before senate probers. Hurley charged that the state department surrendered basic principles of foreign policy.

MIRROR Of Your MIND . . . Child May Play Parents' Role

By Lawrence Gould

May your children become "parent substitutes"?

Answer: Certainly. What makes anyone, regardless of age or sex, a parent substitute to you is the demands you make upon him or her. A mother who looks to her grown son for support, or for advice on her business dealings is in these respects making a "father" of him, just as a man who requires unswerving devotion and unqualified approval from his daughter is making a "mother" of her. No one is ever too old in years to look for parent substitutes if his emotions are still childish, and this is particularly true of older people as they approach "second childhood."

Are extraverts saner than introverts?

Answer: No. As regards sanity, there is no difference between them. Both the tendency to be primarily interested in things outside yourself (extraversion) and absorption with your own ideas and feelings (introversion) are normal in moderation and both can become neurotic escape if exaggerated. Whichever is your prevailing pattern, you should take care not to let yourself become one-sided. If you are an extravert, stop and ask yourself occasionally just what you are getting out of all your strenuous activity; if you are an introvert, try to acquire a hobby that will "get you out of yourself."

Does fear of death cause claustrophobia?

Answer: No. If anything, it is the other way around. I have known people whose fear of death proved really to be fear of being buried, because that meant being shut in. Like all phobias, morbid terror of being in a place which you cannot get out of goes back long before you knew there was any such thing as death. It may represent a small child's fear of being held back by his parents from trying to satisfy his instinctive wishes, which turns in adult life into fear of the conscious and unconscious inhibitions that still keep him "cooped up." Nothing creates more anxiety than an intense, unsatisfied desire.

Some Boils Caused by Nose Infection

By Dr. James W. Barton

MOST INDIVIDUALS during their lifetime have had a boil. This infection is taken to mean that they have been eating too much food for the amount of work or exercise taken, have allowed themselves to become constipated or have not been as careful about bathing regularly as they should have been. We are told that the greatest preventative for boils is constant cleanliness of the back of the neck, the armpits and the anus and genital organs. The back of the neck is the most frequent place, in men, for boils to occur.

A boil is an inflammation of the deeper layers of the skin, usually around a hair root or an oil gland. The commonest organism found in boils is the pyogenes (pus forming) aureus, a staphylococcus organism.

A boil gives us a vivid picture of how nature sends its white corpuscles (disease fighters) immediately to the scene of an infection. They surround the spot where infection starts by a hard white wall which we can see as we look closely at a boil. This wall is to wall off the infection so that it will not spread to other parts. The soft dark center finally breaks down and thin pus comes out. Finally, the center or dead part, the core, comes out and the boil heals.

The treatment to hasten the cure of the boil is application of equal parts of laundry soap and brown sugar or an ordinary bread poultice. When "ripe," a toothpick dipped in carbolic acid punctures the central spot and the boil opens up and discharges its contents. At no time is the boil squeezed, but drawing the skin away with thumb and fingers will help to empty the boil.

It may come as a surprise to many of us to learn that many boils are started because of the hands carrying infections from the nose to various parts of the skin. Doctors verify this statement.

DOOR BELL RINGERS ARISE

NOW we know why the United States supreme court has been acting so ornery about things lately. It used to be steady-going and dependable. But for some years it has been irascible, disputative and unreliable. The cause seems clear. It has been bothered by brush salesmen. This was revealed the other day in a sharp decision declaring, to all effects, that no salesman has any right to ring a doorbell without permission of the housewife. And written permission, too. The court held constitutional the right of any community to pass such a law. It showed less disagreement than in any case in years. (There were a couple of dissents, but these were from justices who never answer a doorbell anyhow, and just yell down "Scram.")

T. Aristotle Winch, of Winch, Winch, Smathers, Winch and Winch, this department's favorite attorney (who worked his way through college selling magazine subscriptions) declares the court off base, however. He cites Hubble versus Flatfoot (506. Mass. 84) which held that a doorbell is a doorbell and is put there to be rung. "Indeed," reads this decision, "if there is a doorbell on a house and it does not work, a salesman may even be within his rights in heaving a rock through an upper window."

Mr. Winch also cited Bottlefly versus Mrs. Potts (86. Conn. 325). In this case Mrs. Potts was forced to chop the foot off a book salesman after he had stuck it in the doorway. Bottlefly sued for a new foot. The court suspended Mrs. Potts' hatchet license saying, "Even if she had been summoned downstairs for the fourth time that morning by peddlars, the salesman was within his rights in trying to advance literature. The practice of inserting the foot in a doorway has been long allowable under common law. The argument that the defendant had a right to hack his foot off because she suspected that, failing in his effort to sell her a set of books, he would try to put over a vacuum cleaner, is hereby dismissed."

Then there is the ruling in the case of Haddock versus Crumps (46. Illinois. 76) Here Haddock, a young man, called to sell Hector Crumps subscriptions to seven periodicals, saying he was working his way through college Crumps threw him off the porch, holding that Haddock was at least 37 years of age and that this was his sixteenth season of working his way through college The court held that for every doorbell ringer 37 years of age seeking an education there are hundreds much younger, and their right to operate must be protected.

The most novel ruling, however, came in Stuffle versus Wimpus (33. R.I. 8197). A young man rang the bell and proposed that the tenant go to college while he moved in, subscribed to all the magazines and did the housework. Wimpus, the defendant, hit him with a chair.

What! No Tips?

(Florida has abolished all racing news and information. News item.)

Wasn't it tough enough before?
Wasn't it rough enough to score?
Was the walk to the cashier's cage too short?
Were too many cashing their winning bets?
I can slip you this for a quick retort,
I found each day when the red sun sets
That even with all the information,
All the tips that a sheet could print,
That hot per cent cut the daily ration
And kept me blocked from an open mint.

I wonder what made a somebody sore?
I wasn't getting too rich before.

The Case of Eddie Arcaro

Practically all racing experts, if any, will tell you Eddie Arcaro is the best race rider in the world. Against this many solid horse players, if any, will tell you that they never bet Eddie Arcaro in any race unless it's a big stake.

Most of the trainers want Arcaro for stake races. Few horse players want him, race after race.

Here is a note from one of them: "Why is it that Eddie Arcaro wins more big stakes than any other rider, and yet loses so often on better horses in other races? I've seen Arcaro ride favorites either last or out of the money more often than any rider I ever saw. I've seen him run last, four races in succession, each time riding the top horse. At Santa Anita he was set down 10 days for careless and indifferent riding. They say many of his mounts are false favorites, the odds lowered because Arcaro is riding them. This is strictly the bunk. Arcaro gets his pick of horses more than any other rider. He should lead the jockeys by a big margin. Yet Ted Atkinson outrides him two to one, day after day. So do others.

Grantland Rice

"I've seen Eddie Arcaro in any number of ordinary races get away badly and after that make no effort to get up with the pack. You may ask why so many boo a rider who can win so many stakes. My answer is that the racing public realizes Arcaro has so much money that he is only interested in his cut, with no interest at all in the horse players who may be backing his mount. Or in winning a race for the jockey's normal fee.

"You might be surprised to know how many horse players I know who refuse to back Arcaro on anything except a big stake. One has to admit this season that Arcaro has a poor percentage for average races, considering the fact that most owners and trainers would rather have him.

"Many trainers don't place Ted Atkinson in his class. For all of that, many, many horse players would rather have Atkinson, or Colineri, Guerin or even Cole than the winnner of four Kentucky Derbies.

"Whether he means to or not Arcaro gives you the impression that he is only mildly interested, if that much, in many run-of-the-day trials. It is something Arcaro should watch, or look for the booing to grow."

The Jockey Angle

Veteran jockeys such as Eddie Arcaro and Johnny Longden, two of the wealthiest, two of the oldest, rarely take any chances. A big stake is a little different, but the average race must take care of itself. Neither Arcaro or Longden wants to dive for that slender, hazardous opening that an apprentice would impetuously rush for.

The jockey is in a tough game. It is rougher than pro football or any other sport, including hockey. Young riders have to take certain chances. Few veterans care for any brand of risk. Especially if they are well fixed financially and can still be nominated to ride in big stakes for the 10 per cent cut.

Arcaro, for example, usually has his pick of the major stakes. Last year he had Hill Prince—the best horse of 1950. This year he was offered Battlefield and Bold. These two are certainly top.

There isn't any doubt that on certain days, or in a race he wants badly, Eddie Arcaro is a brilliant rider. He has the skill and hand strength to handle any horse. He is a brilliant judge of pace. He is smart. But in many average races, there is some doubt whether Eddie rides as much to win as he does for exercise. As fine a jockey as Arcaro shouldn't ride so many bad races, if he was continually going all out as Ted Atkinson and others nearly always do. He rides too many poor or just ordinary races for his own good.

Last Rites Held Tuesday For Retired Railroad Man

SERVICES HELD FROM THE METHODIST CHURCH FOR "TOM" BLANK

Had Taken An Active Part In The Affairs Of The Klemme Community

MR. TAALKEUS BLANK

Funeral services for Taalkeus "Tom" Blank were held from the Klemme Methodist Church Tuesday afternoon with the Rev. E. Morris Egeland officiating and with the Wellemeyer Funeral service in charge of arrangements.

Mr. Blank, who was 87 years old, was a retired railroad man. During his younger days he was active in the civic affairs of the community, and was a leader in promoting activities for the betterment of the town. As such he gave much of his personal time and served on the Town Council for 16 years. It was largely through Mr. Blank's efforts that the present sewer system was installed in Klemme and city water mains extended. Mr. Blank was greatly interested in better education and served 18 years on the school board. He was also active in church affairs and was Superintendent of the Klemme German Church for 17 years.

Since retiring from active duty Mr. Blank kept abreast of the times through reading and was very well posted on the affairs of the world. He had a remarkable mind and enjoyed having callers discuss with him the problems of the world.

The story of Mr. Blank's life appears elsewhere in this issue.

Interment was on the family lot in Ell Township Cemetery and Mr. Blank was carried to his resting place by LeRoy Lau, Taalkeus G. Ahrenkiel, Taalkeus Blank, Frederick Blank, Carroll Usher, Ernest Gerardi.

SMALL GRAINS HARVESTING GETS UNDER WAY IN COMMUNITY

The past week or ten days have done wonders for North Iowa crops in the way of hot days and nights, that has zoomed the corn upward and turned oat fields into a golden mass.

Some fields of corn are tasseling. Along Highway 69 north of Klemme a field of corn across from the Vic Huenemann farm has quite a few tassles which this writer observed Monday evening.

Did you ever compare driving a car to a game of checkers?

Of course there's quite a difference, but they do have one thing in common—you try to anticipate the other fellow's moves.

In checkers you try to outwit the other fellow—guess his moves and not let him know yours. In driving, however, you try to determine what the other driver will do and through the use of hand or light signals, tell what you intend to do.

Your Iowa Safety Congress reminds motorists: Signal every turn or stop. In Iowa, both state approved signal lights and proper hand signals are legal.

Most new cars are equipped with signal lights. Always be sure your signal lights work properly. If not, a trip to the garage may save you a trip to the hospital.

Hand signals, when properly used, are the best means to tell other drivers what you intend to do. It is the duty of every driver to know and use these signals:

Stop - left hand and arm downward.

Whether you signal by hand or light, be sure you do signal every turn or stop!

Klemme Farmers Take Forced Vacations Because Of Accidents

Roy Jacobs and Cecil Katter, Klemme farmers, sported bandaged hands the past week due to accidents.

Roy received a badly burned left hand when he picked up a hot iron he had been welding. Cecil Katter got his right hand injured in machinery and had to have the doctor do some fancy stitching.

Careful you farmers, we don't want to have you get hurt during the summer rush.

Plans Merger

CENTRAL STATES ELECTIRC CO. PLANS MERGER

Stockholders of the Central States Electric Company in this vicinity have been notified of a proposed plan to merge the company into the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company. A special meeting of stockholders to vote on the proposed merger will be held in Cedar Rapids on August 16th.

Under the plan holders of $25 par value preferred stock of Central States Electric Co. will receive one-half share of $50 par value 4.80 per cent preferred stock of Iowa Electric Light and Power Company for each share they now own and in addition will receive all of the accumulated dividends in cash.

Common stockholders of the Central States Electric Company will receive two shares of common stock of Iowa Electric Light and Power Company for each share they now own. Annual dividends of 90 cents per share are currently being paid on the common stock of the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company.

The plan has been approved by the boards of directors of each company and recommended to the stockholders for approval as being of mutual benefit. According to John B. Bachofer, vice president of the Central States Electric Company, the change of ownership would not mean any change in the operating policies or personnel of the Central States property. The merger will, however, strengthen the financial position of the Central States Electric Company and insure the growth of its facilities to meet the increasing demands for gas and electricity in the area it serves.

BY RAY EASTMAN

Nick was just 16 when the first symptoms of the "disease" appeared. Through the next four years, it was obvious to everyone in the community that he was getting progressively worse.

The first major convulsion occurred one Sunday afternoon when he was 20. Nick drove his car into the quiet town and began deliberately chasing pedestrains out of the streets.

He cleared the streets like a plague on wheels and, since the small town did not have a police car, drove off unmolested. The next day, however, Nick was arrested in his home and charged with reckless driving.

To Nick, the arrest was a shock. It was little like surgery being suddenly applied to a condition that had allowed to develop to an advanced stage. The town settled back to watch the results, hoping for the best.

For about a month it appeared that Nick was on the mend. Then, slowly at first, the old symptoms came back, more violent than before.

After that, the "disease" ran out to a swift climax one night as Nick, driving a car load of young people, sped into a curve with a can of beer in one hand and six empties clattering on the floorboards under his feet.

Nick and one of his friends died in the rolled-up wreck that smashed through a billboard.

Nick's disease was simply habitual recklessness with an automobile. It began in minor violations and went on, unchecked, until it destroyed completely his sense of responsibility - the sense which markes the difference between "healthy" and dangerous drivers.

In the end, Nick had become as incapable of sane driving as he was of treating himself for a tumor. In the beginning, he might have been saved by a simple, painless, inexpensive treatment - Driving Training in his high school.

DOROTHY POLSDOFER IS BRIDE OF ROBERT HISCOCKS

Ceremony Performed At The Liberty Church

In a candlelight ceremony at the Liberty Methodist Church west of Klemme, Dorothy LaVonne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Art Polsdofer of Klemme, became the bride of Robert Hiscocks, Jr, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hiscock, Sr. of Britt.

The candles were lit by Bueford Polsdofer, brother of the bride and Jon Hiscock, brother of the groom. The Rev. E. Morris Egeland read the ceremony.

The church was decorated with garden flowers. Mrs. J. L. Abele played a prelude of piano music and also played the wedding march. She accompanied the Beier trio, LaVonne, Beverly and Shirley, who sang, "At Dawn" and "I Love You Truly."

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore an aqua suit with white accessories and a corsage of white roses and yellow carnations. She also wore a locket, a gift from the groom. Mrs. Art Hanson, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid and wore a yellow dress with a corsage of yellow and white carnations. Art Hanson was best man. Don Hiscocks, brother of the groom and Duane Polsdofer, brother of the bride were ushers.

The bride's mother wore a grey flowered dress and white accessories with a corsage of white and yellow carnations. The groom's mother wore a blue dress with a corsage of white and yellow carnations.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents for the immediate families and a few close friends.

Elda Polsdofer, sister of the bride, had charge of the guest book and also of the gifts with the help of Shirley Beier a friend of the bride.

Mrs. Virgil Rice, sister of the bride, cut and served the wedding cake and Mrs. Glenn Bier, sister of the bride, helped serve. Mrs. Lyle Hanson, friend of the couple, poured.

Lorence Polsdofer, a brother of the bride and Virgil Rice served the ice cream.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiscocks will be at home on a farm at Lineville, Iowa. They received many nice gifts.

NO NATURAL GAS SERVICE FOR KLEMME LIKELY THIS YEAR

Rev. E. M. Egeland wrote the Peoples Natural Gas Co. at Omaha if it would be possible to have natural gas service in Klemme this year.

Ray L. Harrison, vice president and general manager of the company answered Rev. Egeland as follows:

"The pipe line company, supplying our requirements, made application to Federal Power Commission for approval to construct sufficient pipe line capacity that would enable us to serve Klemme. To date Federal Power Commission has failed to approve this application and have set a date for a hearing on the application for Sept. 17th which means that even though they approve such construction, it will be too late to get the pipe in the ground so we can serve you this year. We are not very happy about it but of course the pipe line company connot construct additional facilities without first receiving approval from Federal Power Commission.

"Under the circumstances, it is quite definite that gas will not be available to Klemme this year. However, if the pipe line company's certificate is approved at the hearing on September 17th it seems quite probable we will be in position to go ahead with our construction work in Klemme early in the spring."

County Facts

REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY VALUATIONS GAIN OVER PAST YEAR

Fred C. Missal, county assessor states that the percentage of increases in real and personal property in Hancock County from 1947 to 1951 is 43.4%. Moneys and credits in 1950 was $1,687,110 and in 1951 rose slightly to $1,738,688. Other items of interest to the public are the following items: Assessment Rolls, 2733; Crop Reports, 1963; Homestead Applications, 2663; Dog Licenses 1890.

Mr. Missal states the increase in real estate values is due to new buildings added in 1951 and the increase in personal property is due to new machinery on farms and higher assessments on livestock and merchandise inventories.

Total real values for townships was $22,112,133 in 1950, and in 1951 the figure is $22,216,642. Personal property in the townships compared for the two years was 3,565,544 and 4,588,769.

Total values for towns in 1950 was 4,562,222 and for 1951 is 4,772,545. On personal property the figures were 990,490 for 1950 and for 1951 is 1,151,402. The total gain in dollars and cents for the county was $1,581,374.

The above figures do not include the utilities, as these figures have not as yet been received by Missal.

OBITUARY OF TAALKEUS BLANK, 87

TAALKEUS BLANK, age 87 years and 2 months, a resident of Klemme for fifty-six years, died at his home Friday evening, July 20, 1951.

He was born May 26, 1864 in Germany, province of Ostfreisland, village of Boen.

In 1885, at the age of 21, Taalkeus Blank and Geeske Ruiter were married in the Reformed Church at Bunde, Germany.

The following year they migrated to America and settled in Belmond, where Mr. Blank found employment on the railroad, a new track was being laid between Mason City and Fort Dodge. His wage of 90c per day, this seemed high compared with the 12½c per day which he earned in Germany. A few years later he was promoted to section foreman and transfered to Hayfield, Iowa.

In 1892, Mr. Blank completed his naturalization papers and became a citizen of the U. S. A.

In 1895, when our town was six years old, Mr. Blank and his family moved to Klemme, and he was section foreman here until his retirement in 1928.

Shortly after moving to Klemme Mr. Blank purchased an acreage on the west edge of town, built a home for his family, planted shrubs, shade trees and an orchard. He also built shelter for a few head of livestock, a flock of chickens and many stands of bees.

And thus, for more than a half century this hospitable home has been an influence for good in our community.

Taalkeus Blank was a keen thinker, was mechanically inclined, and could do many things well with his hands. He also did his share as a public servant; he sat on the Town Council for 16 years, on the School Board 18 years and he was Superintendent of the Sunday School in the German Methodist Church for 17 years. Mr. Blank drew the plan for the planting of the beautiful elm trees in Klemme's Park, 1914.

Taalkeus and Geeske Blank lived together for 65 years, and then the wife passed away, this was in June 1950. Since then Mr. Blank kept busy at various shop work, which he enjoyed, but when death claimed him, he was satisfied and ready and willing to go.

Six of his ten children survive. Four daughters:

Mrs. Agnes Ahrenkiel - Goodell
Mrs. Grace Quandt - Klemme
Mrs. Minnie Usher - Rowan
Miss Marie Blank - Klemme

Two sons:

Ralph Blank - Iowa Falls
Fred Blank - West Bend

Also two sisters survive:

Mrs. Eva Goodridge - Cedar Rapids
Mrs. Kate Mauss - Rake

Also 16 grand children and 19 great grand children.

False Security

WHILE MAKING a survey of Europe last winter several top diplomats expressed the following idea about peace or war with Soviet Russia:

"The worst blunder Moscow ever made was to invade Korea. It created unity among the United Nations. It aroused the American people; and it put your mobilization program in high gear.

"And the smartest thing the Kremlin could do now," these diplomats continued, "would be to make a dramatic peace bid. It would throw discord into the United Nations. It would pull the stops out of your mobilization program And it would ease the American people into a false sense of security

"The peace bid wouldn't mean anything in the long run," these diplomats believed "For as long as Russia maintains a huge land army the world cannot be safe. But a false sense of security is just what Moscow wants."

This may be what is happening today. It is interesting that Malik's speech came just as the price control bill was nearing a vote and just as congress was about to adopt the biggest tax bill in peacetime history.

McCarthy Demands Reward

Republican leaders did some fancy, backstage wirepulling to keep Senator McCarthy off the important GOP policy committee Here is the inside story of what happened.

McCarthy had demanded the policy committee seat as his reward for smearing the Democrats and carrying five states for Republican senators last November—Maryland, Utah, California, Indiana and Illinois. He was supported in this claim by such Republicans as Senator Ferguson of Michigan, who argued that McCarthy's name-calling was worth ten to twenty thousand votes in each state; but he was opposed by Senator Millikin of Colorado, the senate chairman, who flatly refused to appoint McCarthy to the policy committee

Even McCarthy's close friend, Senator Taft, remarked privately that he would vote against McCarthy. They feared that, if McCarthy got on the policy committee, it would look as if the Republican party endorsed his tactics.

However, two of McCarthy's more vociferous friends, Senators Welker of Idaho and Jenner of Indiana, drew up a petition to force a showdown vote, and secured the signatures of Senators Wherry of Nebraska, Schoeppel of Kansas and Williams of Delaware. What they proposed was to add another member to the policy committee in order to create a vacancy for McCarthy.

Under the rules, this petition forced Millikin to call a meeting of all Republican senators, which he did.

Meanwhile, however, GOP leaders moved fast. They shifted committee assignments around to create a vacancy on the powerful senate rules committee, then in order to pacify McCarthy, offered the rules post to him. This was too much of a temptation for McCarthy to resist, and he accepted. For it put him in a position to block the senate report on the Maryland elections, where he is up to his neck in this scandal and anxious for a whitewash.

For example, the Maryland investigation has already discovered that McCarthy's assistant, Don Surine, perjured himself before a senate committee and was kicked out of the FBI for fraternizing with a white slavery prostitute he was supposed to be investigating

So McCarthy accepted the rules committee post. After attaining this, however, he refused to be satisfied and continued his campaign to get on the policy committee.

Forgotten Speeches

The last time congress had a major debate on price controls was in 1946, at which time a lot of interesting speeches were made, some of which certain congressmen would like to forget. Significantly, it's some of the same solons who are promising reduced prices if controls once again are relaxed

SENATOR WHERRY (NEB. REP.)—"Mr. Bowles has said that if price controls were eliminated, the price of meat would go up 50 per cent. Mr. Bowles is trying to scare us. My prediction is that without price control meat will cost less than today." (Meat is now up in some cases more than 100 per cent.)

SENATOR TAFT (OHIO REP.)—"The President's figures on possible increases are a wild guess and for the most part dead wrong."

CONGRESSMAN MILLER (NEB. REP.)—"The agency (OPA) has put out so much propaganda and false statements that the people no longer heed their cry of 'wolf! wolf!'"

CONGRESSMAN HOFFMAN (MICH. REP.)—"OPA and its operator Chester Bowles are responsible in part for the fact that the cost of living has gone up."

Joe Louis Better—But How Much?

By GRANTLAND RICE

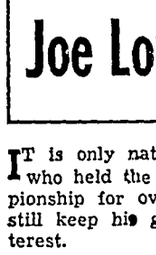
IT is only natural that a fighter who held the heavyweight championship for over 11 years should still keep his grip on national interest.

We are referring to a fellow known as Joe Louis. Although his recent bout with Lee Savold is several days old, people still stop you to ask how the old-timer really looked.

No one will actually get the answer until he hooks up again with a younger, faster fighter by the name of Ezzard Charles.

As we somewhat dimly understand Einstein's "Theory of Relativity" it amounts to this—a train may be moving a bit slowly, but it appears to be moving faster in passing a stationary telephone pole.

Just after Joe's recent victory, I ran across my old friend Walter "Goodtime Charlie" Friedman, just back from the West. Goodtime Charlie, discoverer of Primo Carnera, has just signed up Max Baer for the wrestling circuit and taken over the management of a new colored heavyweight, Bob Golden, still in the army.



Grantland Rice

"No old man is going to beat Louis," Friedman said. "But a thing called youth is a different story—quite a different story. Give Louis credit, full credit, for the way he looked against Savold. But please don't forget that Savold is no Charles. Savold has been rusting for three years. Charles has been almost as busy as Joe has been. And Charles is still much younger and faster than either."

"So you don't think this fight has proved anything?" I asked.

"Yes, it has," Goodtime Charlie said. "It has proved that Louis has improved, no matter how bad Savold looked. But just how much I wouldn't know."

That seems to be the answer to the Louis improvement—how much? Weighing as much as he has recently, or even with a little poundage added, the Bomber looked thinner in the body. He seemed to move with more alertness, if not with greater speed. All of this could not be charged to Savold's lack of mobility.

The main thing the Louis-Savold fight did was to more than double interest in the next Louis-Charles meeting, provided, of course, Charles gets safely by Walcott in Pittsburgh in their July show.

Bolstering the Dodgers

There is one detail connected with the recent Cub-Dodger deal that can't be charged against the Cubs. As stupid and as one-sided as the deal was, it didn't slip the pennant to Brooklyn.

With seven members already set for any All-Star National League squad, Chuck Dressen had little to worry about winning a pennant. His N.L. All-Stars are Campanella, Roe, Newcombe, Hodges, Robinson, Reese and Snider.

Against this array of talent, one of the best National League teams in history, Brooklyn faced a league with no particular consistent strength.

For example, there was one first-class ballplayer on the Cubs, above the average. His name was Andy Pafko. So he was traded.

There were two good ballplayers on the Pittsburgh team—Kiner and Westlake. Westlake was traded away, leaving Pittsburgh with but one good ballplayer.

If Brooklyn doesn't win the N.L. pennant by 20 games it will be due to a long run of sleeping sickness, or because Dressen's tender heart has a feeling for suffering souls.

No wonder the Cubs are getting to be perennial last-place battlers. They either keep in their favorite home, the cellar, or they give someone else a sturdy battle for this eighth-place spot.

Pafko was just about worth the rest of the Cub squad. In the old days, the National League always gave you the big pennant race. Now it's the American League that supplies about 90 per cent of pennant interest and pennant action with the White Sox, Yankees, Red Sox, Indians and possibly the Tigers still in the gay and giddy grapple for the so-called gonfalon.

More About Eddie Arcaro

"Your contributor's recent letter about Eddie Arcaro's record was entirely incorrect," writes Irving Phillips. "All you need do is look to the record. This record of the National Jockey Standings from January one to June one, 1951, shows the following averages in order—percentage of winners to total mounts. Arcaro, 23 48 per cent; Borgemenke, 21.7; Knowles, 21.10; Mares, 20.16. The same list shows Atkinson, 15.30; Shoemaker, 19 53.

Reader Phillips has made a good point. There are no experts or statisticians who can argue effectively against figures.

SHOPPER'S CORNER

By DOROTHY BARCLAY

HOME FRONT LINE

HOMEMAKERS, line up for your summer campaign! Preserve the home front by preserving food—by canning, freezing or drying, anything you can lay your hands on! For the national drive for food preservation is being stepped up!

Food—fruits and vegetables particularly—are plentiful now and throughout the summer. You're either growing your own, or choosing from the generous stock at your grocer's—and it's up to you to make it last, by putting up for the hungry winter months.

The department of agriculture reports vastly increased interest in home-gardens and in requests for seeds. They estimate that 2½ million more gardens are in operation than there were a year ago. Congratulations, home-makers and home-gardeners!

But that's not enough! To meet the challenge—the need for increased food supplies and the stretching of the family food budget call for preserving all the fruit and vegetables you can find—from your own garden and from your food stores—and stepping up your own food preservation program along with the national demand! Here, too, the department of agriculture reports increased interest this year—twice as many requests for information on home-canning and freezing!

BUDGET SAVER

Does it pay to put up foods at home? Says a prominent nutritionist, "In dollars and cents, you can save about one-half the cost of the food if you invest your time in canning and freezing". Worth it, don't you think?

This same authority goes on to point out that you homemakers who take advantage of peak seasons to buy fresh foods in quantity on the market, are not only saving money, but checking inflationary pressures

Set your goal for your family, on the elastic basis of 100 quarts of canned or frozen food per person per year.

On the basis of that goal, figure 30 quarts of tomatoes in various forms; 20 quarts of green and 10 quarts of other vegetables; and 40 quarts of fruits.

LINE UP SUPPLIES

Good news for the novice-canner! There are plenty pressure-cookers still available—and plenty of advice on how to use and care for them!

Remember that pressure-cooking means working with steam under pressure, which could spell danger. However, danger can be avoided by following these simple rules:

1. Be sure the safety valve is kept clean, free from corrosion and in working order;
2. Keep enough water in the canner
3. Fasten the lid securely.
4. Make sure the petcock is open when you put the lid on the canner.
5. Be sure the petcock is open before unfastening the lid.

For you novices in the ranks of canners, your dealer will be only too happy to give you detailed advice.

And if you need more glass containers than you ever had use for before, be of good cheer—the supply is high, if you hurry!

Village Votes Two Times On Building New School

MIDDLEVILLE, Mich.—For the second time within a month the people of Middleville voted against a $155,000 bond issue to construct a new five room elementary school building.

The second special election was called as a result of being petitioned by residents who expressed the belief it would result in a favorable vote because they thought many people misunderstood the issues in the first election.

The bond proposal was defeated by a vote of 432 to 341.

The big question in the election that may have caused the negative vote concerned the location of the school. Many wanted it built in a new location, while others wanted it on property adjacent to the present school.

Those who advocated a new location did so because they believed little children of the village should not be forced to walk at least a mile to their school across a dangerous railroad crossing, a more dangerous bridge and a still more dangerous state highway.

Lesson for July 29, 1951

THE Christians in the city of Corinth were bothered about a number of things. One of them never bothers anybody any more, and yet, strange as it seems, it throws a light on some of the hottest problems a Christian meets.

Dr. Foreman

The Corinthian problem was beefsteak We have a problem with that too,—that is, how are we going to pay for it? That wasn't the Corinthian problem

This was away back in Roman times. Every city had its temple where sacrifices were made to the gods Sacrifices were of all kinds, from flowers to cattle It was considered rather wasteful, after killing a big bull, to throw the carcass away; so after the ceremonies at the temple, the rose garlands would be taken off the beast's neck, and the animal would be hauled away to some butcher's shop, where it would be cut up into roasts, steaks and what not, and sold over the counter just like any other meat.

Now some of the Christians began to worry over their meat supply. Suppose I buy a steak in the market (one would ask) and suppose that steak came from a bull or a cow that has been killed as a sacrifice to one of these heathen gods? Won't that make me guilty of idolatry?

Your Conscience May be Clear, but—

SO they wrote to the best man they knew, their old evangelist and pastor, the man who had converted them to Christ and organized their church, the Apostle Paul. They asked him about this and other things; and what we call "I Corinthians" is his answer.

You might think this beefsteak problem trivial, but Paul never handled a trivial problem in a trivial way. He approached the problem in this way: Meat is only meat, he said; it certainly wasn't the bull's fault that he was part of a heathen ceremony. As for the butcher, he paid good money for the animal, in a perfectly respectable business transaction. Then where was the sin in eating such meat?

But wait a minute. Suppose you are dining out, and you happen to know where the meat came from, and everybody at the table knows, and somebody at the table isn't very clear-headed, and when he sees you eating the meat, thinks you must be approving of heathen sacrifices; then what?

Or perhaps, some one else is less enlightened than you; eating such meat seems quite wrong to him, but when he sees you eating it, he may (just to be polite) follow suit, and yet his conscience, not being an educated conscience like yours, will hurt him all the same So what you do quite freely and rightly, causes another man to go against his conscience.

Think of Your Brother!

NOW, then, Paul says. "If what I eat makes my brother fall, I will never eat meat again, rather than make my brother fall." (American translation.) There you have the Christian principle.

The important question is not, "Is it any harm?" but, "What effect is this going to have on other people?"

We have seen that the basic Christian principle in all human relationships is the importance of personality. If an act, even a harmless and blameless act, hurts persons—makes them sin, makes them go against their own conscience, then the Christian's rule is at once: Don't.

The rightness or wrongness of a thing is not all in the thing itself: it comes from its effects on persons. Now apply this to some of our own problems of social living. Is drinking alcoholic liquor a sin? Is the use of tobacco sinful? Is dancing wrong? (—to name a few.)

Let us suppose, for the sake of the argument, that you are not harmed by such things yourself. It is a fact, however, that some people are harmed by them. Now suppose your act, which is quite harmless to you and done with a clear conscience, influences another and perhaps weaker person to indulge in something harmful to him? Then a Christian will say, as Paul said: If this thing makes my brother fall, I will never do it again. Which, after all, is more important to me, my own freedom or my brother's character?

Iron Curtain Also Cuts Bering Strait Fur Swaps

Washington, D.C.—The Iron Curtain is also a Fur Curtain between Big and Little Diomede.

No longer do American cigarettes, tea, flour and sugar buy Siberian fox pelts and walrus-tusk ivory across the three-mile channel of icy water which separates Russian from American soil, midway across Bering Strait, the National Geographic Society reports.

Russian soldiers man a lookout post on a rocky shoulder of Big Diomede Island, easternmost sentry station of Soviet sovereignty Staring across the International Date Line at U S-owned Little Diomede, for three years they have cut off all trade and social calls among Eskimo families who literally have relatives on both sides of the world, yet are only a few minutes' paddle apart.

Since the glacial age the Diomedes, twin mountain peaks protruding above the surface of Bering Strait, have served as steppingstones between Asia and America. In 1867 Russia sold Little Diomede with Alaska to the United States, but retained Big Diomede.

Each island supports an Eskimo village. Their inhabitants scratch a living from sea and land by hunting walruses, whales, seals, bears and foxes.

Little Diomede families, living closer to Siberia than to Alaska, once traded regularly with their Russian neighbors.

Kill That Smell

Oddest request ever received by a certain company was from a man who wanted an old car to smell like new The concern, which manufactures flavors and fragrances, accepted the challenge and now the old jalopy smells like it just rolled off the production line.

Painful Corsets

In Queen Elizabeth's day ladies wore corsets which gave them a painful but elegant 13-inch waist; 50 years ago standards and waistlines had been relaxed to a more comfortable 18-20 inches; in the interests of health, girdle manufacturers today generally set 24 inches as the minimum for foundation garments they make.

OPEN CENTERS For This Farmer
Everett Lewison
Vermillion, South Dakota...
"I own a 360-acre farm and I know just about what I have to have in tires to get my work done. Maybe my soil is different, but it seems to me that Firestone Open-Center Tires pull better than any of the others."
EVERETT LEWISON.

TRACTION CENTERS For His Neighbor
Leaf Larson
Vermillion, South Dakota
"With 550 acres to farm, I have plenty of opportunities to judge tractor tires. About six years ago I had my first experience with Firestone Traction-Center Tires, and today I have them on all my tractors. In my judgment, they're the best tires money can buy."
LEAF LARSON.

Firestone
CHAMPIONS For Both

THAT'S the way it is in most farming localities — Some farmers want Open-Center Tires, while others find that Traction-Centers do a better job in their soil conditions. In all probability, you have a definite preference, too.

If it's an Open-Center you like best, try the Firestone Champion Open-Center Tire. You'll find that its curved bars pull better, its Flared Tread Openings keep the tire clean, and its wide, flat tread wears longer than treads of other Open-Center Tires.

Or—if you think a Traction-Center Tire will do your job best, try the one and only Firestone Traction-Center, the choice of more than a million farmers. Remember — only Firestone gives you your choice between the greatest Open-Center and the only Traction-Center Tire on the market today.

PECK-PROHASKA NUPTIALS AT ST. WENCESLAUS

In an all-white wedding at St. Wenceslaus Catholic Church, Duncan, on the morning of June 20, Miss Thelma Berneice Peck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce H. Peck of Dodge Center, Minn., became the bride of Arnold Frank Prohaska, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Prohaska, Garner

The Rt. Rev. Msgr. W. C. Hradecky performed the double ring ceremony before the altar decorated with peonies and orange blossoms.

The choir sang High Mass, in which was included "Eve Marie." Miss Cleta Buzicky, organist played the processional and recessional.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was attired in a white marquisette gown with a fitted bodice and long sleeves which came to a point at the wrist. Inserts of chantilly lace in a full skirt extended into a court train edged also with lace. The fingertip veil was of illusion veiling, from a crown of baby seed pearls and beads and was trimmed with matching lace. She carried a white orchid and carnations on a white mother-of-pearl prayer book. Her only jewelry was a three-strand pearl necklace, a gift of the bridegroom.

The matron-of-honor, Mrs. Irene Wordekoff, sister of the bride, wore a white marquisette gown trimmed with lace and tiny rosebuds. She wore a white picture hat.

Bridesmaids were Mrs. Marian Haff, sister of the bridegroom, and the Misses Charlotte and Doris Peck, sisters of the bride. They were dressed in gowns and hats indentical to that of the matron-of-honor, and they carried matching colonial bouquets of yellow carnations centered with gardenias. Their rhinestone necklaces were gifts of the bride.

Raymond Prohaska was his brother's best man. Attendants were Charles Peck, brother of the bride; Robert, brother of the bridegroom; and Edwin Chizek, cousin of the bridegroom. They wore summer suits with white boutonnieres.

Kathy Pritchard, little friend of the bride, was the flower girl. She wore a white organdy gown trimmed with frosted organdy. She carried a net tulip-shaped basket and dropped yellow petals on the white carpet. The ringbeares, Carl Kopacek and Lawrence Rayhons, cousin of the bridegroom, wore white suits with black bow ties. They carried the rings on white carnations in puffs of net.

The bride's mother wore a pink bemberg dress with white and black accessories. The bridegroom's mother wore a pink mignon dress with white accessories. Both wore yellow and white carnation corsages.

Ushers were Merle Peck, brother of the bride, and Charles Haaf, brother-in-law of the bridegroom.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the Duncan community hall for some 275 guests. The color scheme was yellow and white.

Miss Janice Olson was in charge of the guest book and Mrs. Merle Peck, the bride's sister-in-law, assisted by Mrs. Melvin Keeling, sister of the bride, had charge of the gifts. Mrs. Keeling also cut the wedding cake.

The couple left on a wedding trip to the southwestern states. For going away, the bride chose a peach summer suit and white accessories. Her corsage was a white orchid.

The bride is a graduate of Ventura high school and is employed as a bookkeeper at the Hancock National Bank in Garner. The bridegroom attended Garner high school and is now farming with his father. The couple is presently located at the home of the bridegroom's parents.

Out-of-town guests at the wedding were from Dodge Center, Minn., Milwaukee; and Clarion, Independence, Iowa Falls, Mason City, Clear Lake, Algona, Hampton and Calmar.

A dance and reception for the couple was held the same evening in the Duncan Community Hall.

Texans Came Wednesday For A Visit With Klemme Relatives

Mr. and Mrs. John Neuberger and children, John Wm. Jr. and Marcia, arrived in Klemme Wednesday from Brownsville, Texas and visited with Klemme relatives and old friends until Monday, when they again left to continue a vacation trip.

The Neubergers were driving two cars, the family car and a new Mercury which belongs to John Wm. Jr. Both cars were loaded with camping equipment, cooking utensils, etc. Also, both cars have special carburetors and butane (bottled gas) is used for power. Mr Neuberger is in the butane business at Brownsville and says a lot of cars use butane there, as well as trucks and tractors. He found a few tractors in the Klemme vicinity using butane gas. It is about half the price of gasoline, according to John.

The family left Klemme with the intention of driving through northern Minnesota, North Dakota, perhaps up into Canada and back via Yellowstone Park and the Rocky Mountain region.

Both of the Neuberger children, Marcia and John Wm. are in college. The latter graduated from high school in mid-semester and has already completed a year of college work. The young man who is 6 ft. 5 inches tall, has his dad bested in height, John being a mere 6 ft. 2 inches tall. Texas is noted for tall people, and in this case North Iowa made a real contribution to the State of Texas by sending this tall family to the Rio Grande Valley.

CLASS OF 1937 AT GARNER HOLDS REUNION

Family Gathering At Walter Blumer Home Sunday

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Blumer entertained the several Neuberger families at their home Sunday evening, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. John Neuberger and children of Brownsville, Texas. A nice picnic supper was enjoyed by the clan, and the evening was spent in visiting.

Iowa's Finest Oak

Remember when a Webster County oak tree was named the finest in Iowa?

You should have heard Em! "Well, the finest oak tree in the state's in our backyard," she sputtered.

Cousin Joe and I laughed about it as we sat in the shade yesterday afternoon. It's easy to laugh and relax under that tree . . . or any oak tree, for that matter.

Jim and I sat there sipping our temperate glasses of sparkling beer and agreed that there's a grand friendliness about oak trees. You lean back, shut your eyes, and listen to the breeze in the leaves. Or you settle down and watch the cars whiz by, and the kids playing ball in the vacant lot. It's a wonderful, contented feeling.

To me, there's a friendliness about an oak tree's shade and a mild glass of beer on a hot afternoon that's hard to beat.

Em may be right. Maybe our tree's the finest in the state. But, then, we've never had a chance to live under that Webster County tree.

Cincinnati Citizens Sponsor Summer Village for 54 Children

If there is a difficult situation that has not been put right about it, according to the mothers of children in other communities, it is that one is found here at the close of school holidays. Our children's Invitational Summer Village is an institution of long-standing duration who assembled at the Hills near Cincinnati. Ohio, on June 8 will go on for six weeks.

The village was organized by 54 business men from Cincinnati and vicinity. Mayor Walter Sherwood Schmidt, Cincinnati's Director of Recreation Guy Tuttle, Cincinnati Reds baseball manager Bucky Harris, and Cincinnati King Cowgirl Dale Evans will be present at the opening ceremonies.

Matt Gallagher, assistant director of the Child Guidance station at the University of Cincinnati and a counselor at the summer village near Cincinnati, is the center of all eyes as the dedication begins Kevin Hume

For four weeks they lived a carefree and delightful existence, far from the unhappy circumstances which had made it necessary for them to be sent to the village. They returned home with a better understanding of interpersonal relations and themselves.

The project and the organization received widely favorable support from the citizens of Cincinnati who marveled at what the world was coming to when such a project was necessary. But they endorsed it and the evidence that was needed to show the public that the village was a success was the fact that it was duplicated in Greater Cincinnati, England and other countries.

How did it come about? Dr. Doris Twitchell Allen, a psychologist and member of the faculty at the University of Cincinnati, started thinking of better ways of using a village that it had been used before. Finally, in early 1948, a former counselor named Cathy was employed to plan the children's project. June 8 of this year.

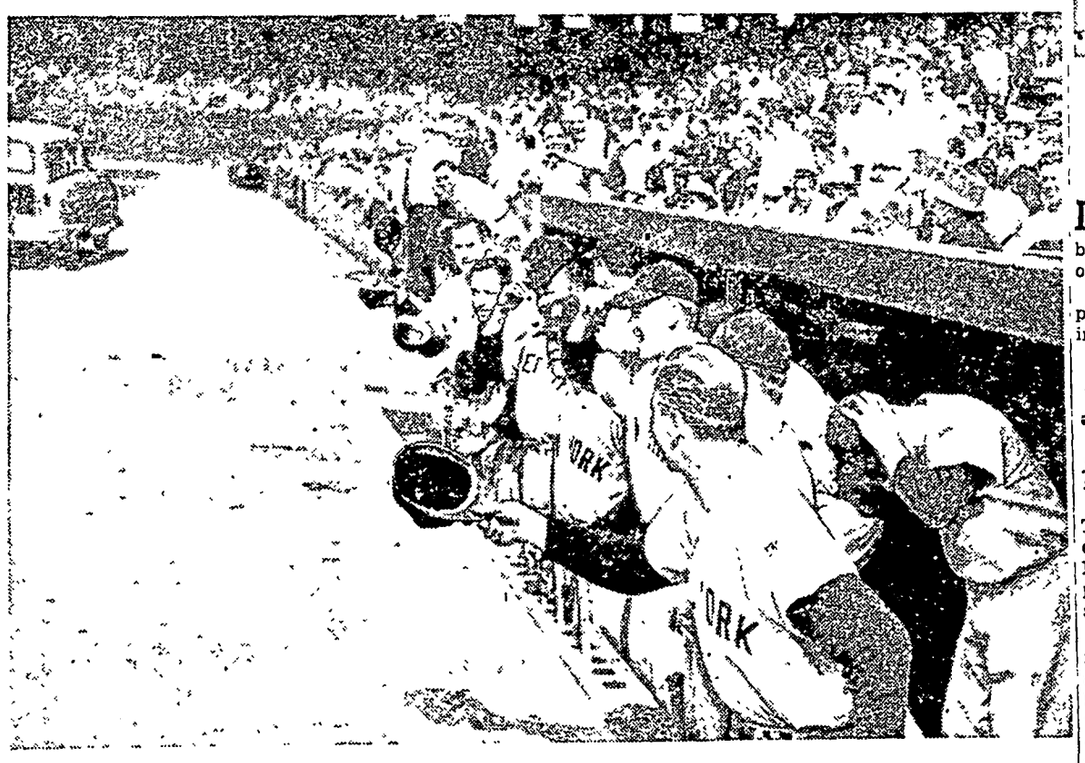
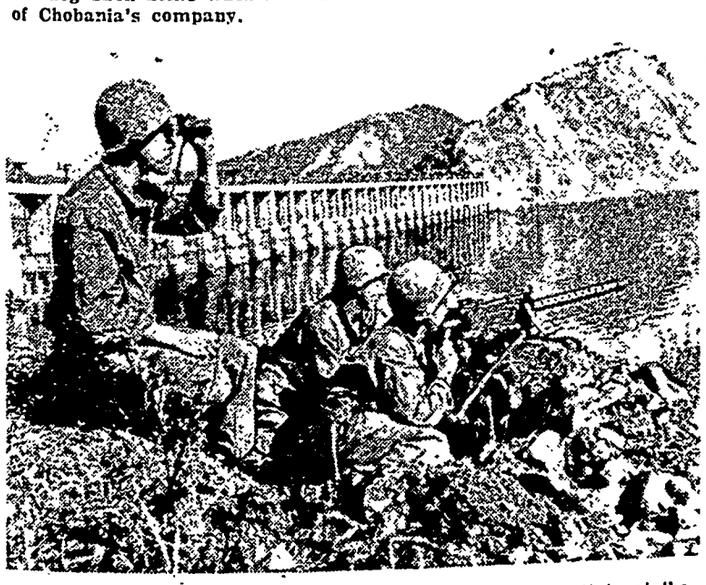
YOUTH WILL BE SERVED . . . Tete-a-teting here are probably the youngest platoon leader and the youngest regimental commander in Korea. They are Sgt. 1st Class Joseph R. Nelson (left), 18, of Washington, Ohio, who found himself in charge of a platoon when casualties took the senior officers, and Col. Charles M. Mount, College Park, Ga., who at 35 commands the 32nd regiment of the seventh division. Col. Mount is a West Point graduate and a veteran of World War II. His wife and two children live in Tokyo. Both he and Sgt. Nelson made their first visit to Korea in the Inchon invasion last September.



YANKEES TEASE WHITE SOX . . . In Chicago, the world champion New York Yankees bow in mock reverence to a Chicago White Sox relief pitcher as he is taxied from the bull pen to the mound in a system designed to speed up the game. The Yankees preferred to walk back and forth to the mound, and each time a White Sox pitcher was knocked out of the box, his relief would be greeted with loud taunts as he drove by the Yankee dugout. At the time of this byplay, the White Sox were leading the American League, and the Yanks were hard pressed to keep up with them.

WITH NOSE FOR COMMIES . . . PFC Bobby Chobania, of Cleveland, Ohio, made himself a loyal buddy when he picked up this Korean dog and adopted him. Now the dog goes on all patrols with Chobania and has developed an extra-sensitive nose for smelling out Chinese, whom he dislikes. Chobania hopes he can pull the necessary strings to bring the dog back home when he comes. Meanwhile the canine is mascot of Chobania's company.

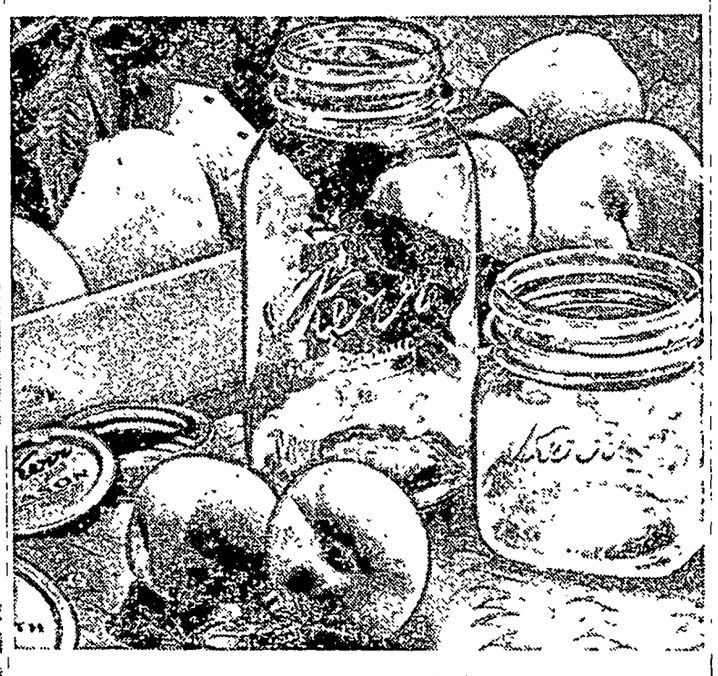


HOLDING THAT LINE . . . It looks very peaceful, and it is at the moment, but violence could erupt any second at the spot where these three GI's are guarding a reservoir in Korea. The enemies are across the body of water. Soldiers are Corp. P. Ramires, PFC W. Ferrie and PFC E. L. Masterson. Ramires has glasses trained on opposite shore while Masterson keeps fingers close to trigger of machine gun, ready to open fire instantly.

ON TRIAL . . . Dr. Alajos Pongraz, former employee of the U.S. legation in Budapest, is shown facing trial on charges of conspiring to overthrow Hungarian Communist regime by espionage. He is one of eight co-defendants.

HERE I AM . . . Most picturesque arrival at Idlewild airport for some time was Mrs. Pauline Wilsdorf, said to be 105 years old. The Polish widow will settle near Buffalo with a 50-year-old son, daughter-in-law and their adopted child.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers



Can Luscious, Seasonal Fruits Now

(See Recipes Below)

Fruit Canning Helps

LUSCIOUS FRUITS AND BERRIES canned right now mean better meals for your family later on during the year.

Isn't it nice to open a can of applesauce for luncheon, without having to cook it just before the meal?

Nice, too to take peach halves, pears or apricots for salad right out of a jar, isn't it?

How about a berry pie? They're already in the jar, sweetened, ready to be put in a crust. Fruit for dessert? Open a can of pineapple, resting on the canning shelf.

Fruit is easy to can because it requires only the simplest of preparation. Some need skins removed by blanching in hot water. Then they're packed in jars and processed in a hot water bath or oven to cook them completely. If you want to prevent shrinkage on some types, pre-cook slightly.

Applesauce (Hot Pack)

3 pounds green apples
2 cups water
1¼ cups sugar

Wash apples, quarter, core and remove bruised or decayed parts. If fruit has to stand for any time, prevent discoloration by placing in slightly salted water Drain. Add water and cook until soft. Press through sieve or colander to remove seeds and skins. Add sugar and bring to a boil. Pack while hot into clean jars. Adjust cap according to manufacturer's directions Process 15 minutes in boiling water bath.

Baked Apples

Wash and core apples and place in baking dish containing enough boiling water to cover bottom of dish Bake until tender Pack immediately in hot, sterile jars Fill to the top with juice from baking pan and additional medium syrup Seal immediately Medium Syrup: Use 2 cups water, 1 cup sugar, and bring to a boil before packing

Apricots (Open Kettle)

This method gives nice, rich flavor to the fruit. Use firm, ripe apricots and drop into boiling water for ½ minute, then dip in cold water shortly and slip off skins. Remove stones Place fruit in Medium Syrup and simmer for 10 to 15 minutes, then bring to a full boil. Pack immediately into hot sterile jars, filling the jar to the top and sealing quickly.

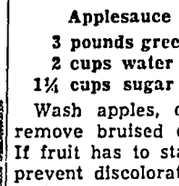
Berries (Hot Pack)

Use these directions for blackberries, blueberries, dewberries, huckleberries, loganberries, mulberries and raspberries, and help prevent floating which often occurs in canning them. Wash and stem berries. Drop into boiling thin or medium syrup (Thin syrup: 3 cups water, 1 cup sugar), and let stand 15 to 20 seconds. Drain. Pack immediately in hot, sterile jars and fill to within ½ inch of the top with boiling syrup in which the berries stood. Seal jar and process 5 minutes in a hot water bath.



LYNN SAYS:
Here are Aids
For Fruit Canning

Work with tongs or gloves when removing jars from hot water to prevent burned fingers.

When a recipe calls for hot, sterile jars, this means they should be prepared by washing in hot, soapy water, rinsing in clear hot water and then placing in a large kettle, tub or pan on a rack or folded cloth. Pour boiling water over them and boil for 10 minutes. Take jars out of hot water as you fill them.

Sour Cherries (Open Kettle)

Wash and pit cherries. For pitting use a pen point inverted in a holder Place cherries in preserving kettle immediately and add enough sugar to sweeten, about 1 cup sugar to each quart of berries Add no water Heat slowly to the boiling point. Pack immediately into hot, sterile jars, and seal each one before filling the next.

Wash, stem and pick over carefully Use ¾ cup sugar for 1 quart currants Place fruit and sugar in kettle Add no water Heat slowly to boiling, shaking kettle to prevent burning occasionally. Boil 5 minutes Fill hot sterile jars and seal immediately

Gooseberries (Cold Pack)

Wash stem and cut off blossom ends with scissors Prick each berry with a fork Prepare 3 cups medium syrup. Drop 1 quart of berries into the boiling syrup and let stand 20 seconds Remove to colander and drain. Repeat, using another quart of berries Continue until there are several quarts in colander for canning Pack closely in hot sterile jars and cover to within ½ inch of top with syrup in which they were dipped. Seal jars and process 20 minutes in hot water bath or 70 minutes in a 250°F oven.

Peaches (Open Kettle)

Use firm, ripe fruit. Dip in boiling water for 1 minute, then in cold water and slip off skins Clingstone peaches are usually canned whole and freestone varieties are cut in halves or sliced Cook peaches in thin or medium syrup for 20 minutes or until clear and tender Pack carefully and tightly.

Pears (Hot Pack)

Peel and leave whole if stems are in good condition, or cut in halves and core. Drop into slightly salted water while preparing until all are done to prevent discoloration. Drain. Precook Kieffer and Sand varieties in boiling water until tender. Drain and use the water in making medium syrup. Cook Bartlett varieties in a medium syrup for 5 minutes Pack in hot, sterile jars and fill with syrup to within ½ inch of top Process 20 minutes in boiling water bath or 70 minutes in 250°F. oven

Pineapple (Cold Pack)

Use fully ripe, sound fruit. Cut off butt end with sharp knife and twist out the top Slice crosswise and pare each slice. Cut out cores and remove eyes. Pack in jars in slices, wedges or grated, as desired. Cover with thin or medium syrup to within ½ inch of top. Seal and process in boiling water bath for 30 minutes; or in oven 90 minutes at 250°F.

For oven canning, set jars 2 inches apart in a shallow pan. Heat oven to temperature necessary before putting in the jars, and begin counting the time immediately. If using an electric oven, do not use the top heating element.

When fruits are packed tightly in jars, you will not have too much space at the top after they're processed. A wooden paddle is good to use for this job, and so is a small olive bottle, the top of which fits nicely on the fruit or tomatoes as you pack.

Editor Sees Kansas City Flood Area First Hand

INDUSTRIAL AREA' HAS APPEARANCE OF A BOMBED OUT CITY

Mix A Tornado With Kansas Mud And You Have What A Flood Does

The Editor of The Klemme Times spent several days in Kansas City the past week and had the experience of seeing the results of the recent flood from the "inside." Entrance to the devastated area is guarded by police and only cars with the proper passes may enter the area. We accompanied Hugh Chapman and his partners in the United Manufacturing Co., who had passes to the industrial area, and we saw the terrific damage of what the flood did to Kansas City.

Our first impression was that we had entered a bombed out, blasted industrial area, a tornado swept part of the city and everything mixed together in 2 to 3 feet of sticky, oil soaked mud. Debris was- every where, wrecked buildings on every side of us. Bulldozers by the hundreds at work trying to clear a path through the streets so that thousands of trucks could start hauling away the mud and debris and dumping it back into the river from whence it had came.

Hundreds of homes in the industrial area are a complete loss. Everything is gone. It looks like the Duncan cyclone disaster multiplied by over a thousand! Scraps of wood, brick, mortar, stone, covered with mud, all which only days earlier had been homes.

The stink in some sections of the industrial area were almost more than we could stand. Dead animals, hundreds of them, being rooted out of the mud with bulldozers . . . now and then a human body . . . . some unfortunate person who could not get to higher ground soon enough but was caught in the wall of water as dikes broke away. Box cars, gondolas, oil tank cars, locomotives . . tipped over, twisted, like a toy train thrown on the floor by a small boy. Large brick buildings crushed to the ground, bricks scattered everywhere. That is what a flood does.

And, as if the flood was not enough, oil and gasoline tanks broke loose from their foundations, floated along with the swift current and then caught afire, spreading flames out on the water, igniting more oil tanks, setting buildings afire, exploding oil drums shooting nigh into the air only to start more fires. Some over 8 city blocks of business places along Southwest Boulevard in the industrial area today are a mass of twisted steel melted by the terrific heat . . . lost.

As far as we could check, there was only one industry which carried flood insurance. Many small businesses are completely wiped out.

One large food warehouse had trenches dug with a dragline and bulldozers shoved the canned food and what have you right out of the building into the trenches.

The wood box factory, of which Hugh Chapman is one of the three owners, suffered a terrific loss. Over 600,000 board feet of lumber was washed away. Saturday while this writer was there some lumber piles were being salvaged. The interior of the factory is a shambles. Wood boxes which had been made up, are scattered all over, all imbedded in mud; machines are covered with a thick layer of mud. The water was 24 feet high here and sections of the roof caved in from the weight of mud which had lodged on top. Just across the street a 3-story brick housing a millworks, sash and door manufacturing, was completely wrecked, the sides caved out, the roof fallen in. Another neighbor, Standard Oil Co., just about washed away. Further over, another neighbor, the Frank Paxton Lumber Co., specializing in fine woods such as walnut, mahogany, maple, birch, etc, lost nearly all of their valuable lumber and their building is a wreck.

The stock yards were badly hit and yards, runways and pens all piled up into great heaps of rubbish. Packing plants, Swifts, Cudahys, Wilsons . . . all were badly damaged and will not be back in production for some time to come.

It was all a sickening sight to behold. There was nothing good about any of it. Thousands are homeless, thousands will be out of work after the clean-up is finished as many businesses are wiped out and will not open again.

Ninety per cent of the homes in the industrial area have been condemned. They cannot be repaired even though some are still standing up. Many commercial buildings are condemned and are unsafe to work in or near.

Despite the disaster, Kansas City is going ahead, night and day and cleaning up The Red Cross is and has been doing a wonderful job in taking care of the thousands of unfortunate people. Many agencies of mercy are coming to the rescue and doing all they can for the striken people who have lost their all.

Words cannot describe the awful scene. The writer hopes never to see anything like it again.

The INVISIBLE Stop Sign..
...In IOWA every driver of a motor vehicle must stop before entering a public street or highway from a private driveway or lane- either in City or Country.
STOP
IT'S THE LAW!

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded businesses and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

Stop signs clearly mark many of the Iowa street corners and highway intersections where motorists are required to stop.

There are countless other intersections, though, where Iowa traffic laws require drivers to stop that are too numerous to mark with stop signs.

Iowa law states that every driver of a motor vehicle must stop before entering a public street or highway from a private driveway or lane either in the city or country and yield the right of way to all approaching vehicles.

One of the most hazardous spots is where your private driveway or lane intersects the street or highway in front of your home.

That's why your Iowa Safety Congress says: There's an invisible stop sign at every private drive.

In town, be expecially careful to proceed into the sidewalk area only when you can do so without danger to pedestrian traffic.

The next time you pull out of your driveway, remember the invisible stop sign.

IMMENSE CROWD AT "DRIVE IN" MOVIES WEDNESDAY EVENING

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

A lot of people tried and failed to save the life of Harry Stone's youngest son, Billy. And it seems strange that they failed, or even that they had to try, for Bill was a healthy farm youngster and Harry was a good father.

The attempt to save Billy's life started in Des Moines almost two years ago when the Assembly passed a law. The attempt went on as newspapers and radio stations - including those in Harry Stone's own farm community - explained how and why the law should be obeyed.

Later, after Billy was dead, Harry remembered also the night at Farm Bureau when a Highway Patrolman talked about that law. But, then, we can all remember lost chances after the last chance is gone.

That last chance was riding with Harry stone one bright spring morning when he drove his pick-up truck down his farm lane Billy came running out of the house and jumped in the cab, as he often did - Then Harry, with the old peaceful habits of ten years on him, drove down the lane and directly onto the county road without stopping

A speeding car crashed into the light truck and Billy was thrown dead into the weed-filled ditch by the lane.

A lot of people were involved in passing and publicizing the law that could have saved Billy's life. They failed, not because the law failed, but because one man failed the law - Billy's own father.

That law You must come to a complete stop before entering a highway from a private drive or lane, whether a stop sign is posted or not.

Contrasting Flavors, Textures Will Keep Menus Interesting

A MEAL THAT'S LIVELY, with color, exciting because of some soft foods, some crisp and crunchy, some tart and spicy while others have a subtle sweetness can keep appetite interest high.

Homemakers who want to keep their families looking forward to mealtime no matter what the weather plan menus with such rules in mind. Consequently menus never become dull, and it's easy to have nutritionally adequate foods not only served but eaten also.

It's fun to see what ingenuity can be used in combining foods for interesting menus. Here's a broiled cheese and rice combination that is proud to appear at any dinner table after a quick trip to the broiler. Dessert and salad courses are combined in one with a watermelon salad bowl, which offers fresh fruit with its crisp texture, an excellent contrast to the soft-textured foods of the main dish.

(Serves 4)

- 1½ cups cooked rice
- 1 cup chopped, cooked, drained spinach
- 1½ cups cheese sauce
- 4 slices tomato

Arrange rice on 10-inch oven platter. Pour half of cheese sauce over rice Cover with spinach. Pour remaining cheese sauce over spinach. Place slices of tomato on top. Bake in a hot (450°F.) oven, about 10 minutes or until heated. Broil, 4 inches from heat, until cheese is lightly browned, about 2 minutes.

Watermelon Bowl Salad

- ½ watermelon
- 2 cups cantaloupe balls
- 1 cup pineapple wedges
- 1 cup blueberries
- Cream cheese
- French or other salad dressing.

With a ball cutter, remove the center from half of a short, thick watermelon. Toss the watermelon balls together with the cantaloupe balls, pineapple wedges and blueberries. Place the watermelon bowl on green leaves on a round chop plate and fill it with mixed fruit. Around the base of the melon, arrange groups of cream cheese cubes. Serve with French or other dressing.

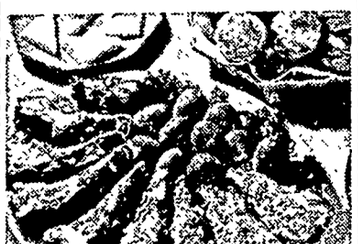
A MENU THAT MATCHES the season and is full of contrast in texture and color is a broiled crabmeat and tomato sandwich. Pair this with green cabbage salad put together with sour cream dressing. A tangy lemon dessert completes the menu:

Broiled Crabmeat-Tomato Sandwich

(Serves 4)

- 8 buttered slices of bread (crusts removed)
- 1 6-ounce can crabmeat
- 2 medium tomatoes
- Cheese sauce

Place one slice of bread in the bottom of each individual casserole dish. Spread with flaked crabmeat. Top with tomato slice and another slice of bread. Pour hot cheese sauce over each sandwich. Place under broil and broil for 7 to 10 minutes or until bread is heated through and nicely browned. Serve immediately.



Liver Loaf slices nicely and has an interesting texture, as well as good color contrast when teamed with tiny pickled beets. Any type of liver may be used for this richly nutritious and appetite-satisfying main dish.

LYNN SAYS:
Here are Foods For Out-of-Doors

When you're eating out, fix kabobs, those tempting tidbits on skewers. Cook them over coals, or broil them in the oven before bringing out to eat.

Sausage makes a tasty kabob when you form the meat into balls and alternate with chunks of apples and cubes of onion.

Oysters rolled in bacon make an excellent first or main course when they're broiled on skewers.

Ham kabobs may be alternated with apple chunks and tomatoes If you prefer, alternate ham cubes with tomatoes, mushrooms and pineapple chunks.

For the he-man, try beef cubes, alternated with mushroom caps and potato chunks Beef or lamb cubes may also be alternated with onions and tomatoes

Barbecue sauce may be brushed over kabobs before broiling. A simple sauce includes ½ cup chili sauce, ¼ cup lemon juice, 2 teaspoons each grated onion and prepared mustard.

LYNN CHAMBERS' MENU

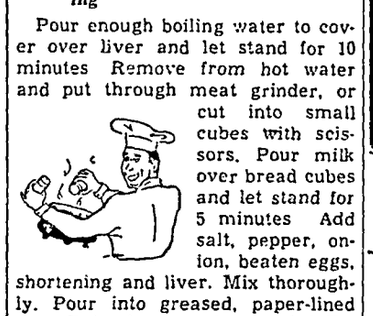
*Recipes Given



You may serve a half watermelon filled with pineapple, blueberries and melon balls as a salad-dessert for dinner, or as a main course salad for a luncheon. Fresh fruit flavors and colors in this type of salad offer cool satisfaction for warm day meals.

LIVER LOAF is a nutritious menu brightener made of ground liver seasoned with a sly hint of onion and blended with egg and milk to come out of the oven a smoothly-satisfying meat loaf. Serve with pickled baby beets and peanut muffins for a menu that's thrifty and properly contrasted.

'Dem Bums' Classiest Nine in Play

By GRANTLAND RICE

SOME four years ago, back in the early winter of 1947, two eminent baseball diagnosticians, Harry Salsinger, the Detroit historian of sport, and Toots Shor, were discussing the two pennant races.

They were talking about the Dodgers. "There will be little to it in the National League for some time to come but the Dodgers," Salsinger said.

"Very little to it," Toots replied. "They have all the ballplayers they need and they have others coming on just as good."

"It is the list of young players coming on," Salsinger said. "This Dodger team is almost sure to get stronger and stronger. By 1950 or 1951 it will be at its best, hard to beat for several seasons." Shor agreed fully.

The Dodgers won in 1947. They won again in 1949. They should have won easily in 1950. Now, as Messrs. Salsinger and Shor said four years ago, they are approaching a new peak.

Mr. Rickey built much too well for the remainder of the National League race. Especially his Pirates, who are currently far behind the Dodgers.

It isn't only for 1951 that this dark Brooklyn shadow will hang over the rest of the league. This thing might go on for several campaigns, as it did for the Yankees some years back when they won six out of seven consecutive pennants.

Grantland Rice

I can't see how any other team can get enough extra help or added strength to move within a furlong of the N.L. leaders. They had all the best of it until they added Pafko and Schmidt, and this merely added crushing strength on both the offensive and defensive side

Recently the Dodgers moved through a heavy batting slump, yet they kept on winning with better pitching than anyone looked for, plus the long hit needed in a pinch. Only overconfidence or sheer laziness can stop this squad.

Waiting For the Punch

Years ago Stanford had seven men who deserved to make any All-American team. Among them were Keith Topping, Benes Hamilton and Bobby Grayson.

Yet they kept winning games by a field goal. "We knew we could win any time we felt like it," Topping told me. "So we'd fool around and finally someone would say: "Aw, let's kick a field goal.'"

This Dodger team is much the same way. They seem to fool around until the eighth or ninth inning and you can almost hear Dressen or someone else say: "Aw, let's have a home run."

And Snider or Hodges or Campanella or Furillo or Robinson will promptly oblige—even with two out in the ninth. With Pafko now added, every man on the team down to the pitcher is dangerous.

The Red Sox have Ted Williams, Vern Stephens, Bobby Doerr and maybe one or two more who can upset the apple cart on a moment's notice. But the Red Sox have no such array of A-bombs as the Dodgers have.

The Yankees, in this respect, are not even in their class, or close to their class. The Cardinals have Stan Musial—and who else? The Giants have one or two fair distance hitters. Pittsburgh has Kiner. The White Sox have Robinson. But what other team has Snider, Pafko, Hodges, Campanella, Furillo, Robinson and now and then a fellow known as Pee Wee Reese?

The Test of Oakmont

Oakland Hills, always a first-class test, was souped up for the recent U.S. Open.

Apparently it is impossible to soup up a course beyond Ben Hogan's play But no one has to soup up Oakmont, a bunkered fortress just outside of Pittsburgh, where the P.G.A. holds championship at match play.

Tommy Armour, a brilliant golfer in his day, tied Harry Cooper at Oakmont in the 1927 U S. Open with a 301 score and then won the playoff 76 to 79. Armour was good enough to be U.S., British and P G.A. champion.

Sam Parks won the U.S. Open at Oakmont in 1935 with 299.

Par at Oakmont is 73. So the last two winners there needed an average of 8 over par. After all, 287 was good enough to win or tie at Oakland Hills This was 13 strokes under the Oakmont test—and at Oakmont the stroke-saving wedge was just coming into use.

According to Armour the wedge means a saving of 2 strokes a round, or 8 strokes in a 72-hole test.

Oakmont, the dream terror of Bill Fownes, is a magnificient test for either match or medal play, but its main pressure comes from the medal side.

Merion and Oakland Hills are the two toughest courses the Open has known in recent years. But neither is quite up to Oakmont with its ridged bunkers and its slippery greens.

In match play Oakmont lends itself to birdies as well as to bogies.

PRICE CEILINGS

● Stores along Main street and elsewhere are operating under a stop-gap controls law, but nevertheless under price controls. The 31-day extension of the act by congress did not affect many orders of Office of Price Administration. For instance, all merchants pricing under CPR 7, MUST as of July 1 have each item marked with its selling price and MUST display prominently a large sign which tells customers that the store is selling no article higher than OPS ceiling prices. Also, OPS said present slaughter quotas on beef are still in effect; that for firms which were to price under orders CPR 22, CPR 30, CPR 37, CPR 41, CPR 45, and CPR 18, which ceilings were to be effective July 2, prices on these articles are now frozen as of June 30, 1951 until further orders from OPS.

A MAIN STREET FEATURE

● Charles E. Wilson, boss defense mobilizer, in quarterly report to the President, said: "No one in this nation believes more firmly in our free economy than I do. No one has less liking for controls. But during the defense period, we cannot permit economic forces to operate with their normal freedom." He declared a COMPLETELY FREE ECONOMY IN THIS PERIOD WOULD CAUSE HARDSHIPS AND INEQUITIES MANY TIMES MORE SERIOUS THAN THOSE CREATED BY CONTROLS. He said: "defense mobilization program must and will continue whether or not fighting stops in Korea."

QUARTERLY REPORTS

● Federal Trade Commission first quarter report for 1951 showed manufacturing corporation profits down 8 per cent from 1950 fourth quarter profits, although sales reached all-time peak. Net manufacturing corporation profits, after taxes for first quarter were $3.3 billions, but despite the 8 per cent decline were 36 per cent above first quarter of 1950. Net sales of manufacturers set a new record of $53.1 billion for the quarter.

● ONLY SMALLEST SIZE CORPORATIONS SHOWED INCREASE ON STOCKHOLDERS EQUITY. THE SMALLEST SIZE WITH ASSETS UNDER $250,000 INCREASED FROM 8 PER CENT IN FOURTH QUARTER OF 1950 to 14.4 PER CENT FOR 1951 FIRST QUARTER.

● Federal Reserve Board report for May and June indicated value of retail sales is being maintained after a considerable decline from January to April. Sales of household durable goods decreased further, while apparel and other soft goods increased. Automotive dealer sales showed little change. June department store sales kept pace with May, while department store stocks were about 30 per cent above a year ago.

● General level of wholesale commodity prices has changed little since mid-May. Prices of grains, fats and oils, cotton gray goods, wool, and tin have declined and a 14-cent reduction in price of rubber to 52 cents a pound was effective July 1. Some carpet manufacturers have reduced prices as much as 11 per cent, but prices of hard floor coverings, in contrast, have been raised further.

ARMED SERVICES QUESTION BOX

(Send your questions about the armed forces or any aspect of military service to: Walter Shead, Armed Services Question Box, 1057 National Press Building, Washington 4, D.C. Answers will be given in this column.)

IN order to be considered full-time students under the GI Bill, veterans in trade and industrial schools must now attend class at least 30 hours per week, the veterans administration has said. This new requirement, adding five hours to the previous time, did not become effective until recently, although Public Law 610, of which is is a part, was enacted by congress nearly a year ago Only full-time students are entitled to full rates of subsistence pay, which range from $75 to $120 a month.

Savings of several million dollars a year on personnel travel costs are expected to accrue to the government as a result of recent agreements between the department of defense and representatives of rail, motor, air, and water carriers in the continental United States. These agreements cover all passenger traffic of the military services traveling on government transportation requests over a majority of the nation's rail, bus, scheduled and nonscheduled airlines, and certain water carriers.

Q. I am an automobile dealer. When veterans come in for cars which they claim are essential to their jobs, what should I tell them about getting GI loans to finance their purchases? G.L.S., Forestville, Md.

A. You should tell them first to find a lender and come to an agreement as to terms of the loan. Veterans, in most cases, need not visit their VA offices because the lenders are generally able to handle the entire process. VA cannot, however, approve car loans unless the auto is essential to the conduct of the veteran's business.

Q. I have an NSLI policy. What would happen to it if I were to die during the 31-day grace period, owing VA for a month's premium? A.G., Albuquerque, New Mexico.

A. Full settlement would be made to your beneficiaries, except for a deduction of any unpaid monthly premium, because the insurance remains in force during the grace period.

Q. I quit school some time ago under the GI Bill because of unsatisfactory progress. I would like to start in again before the July 25 cut-off date. What must I do? J.S.B., Owingsville, Ky.

A. You must establish the fact that the unsatisfactory progress was not due to your own misconduct or negligence or lack of application and you must also undergo advisement and guidance so that VA can determine whether you have a good chance of successfully completing the course you now want to take

Q. Does the July 25 cut-off date apply to World War II veterans? E.B.W., Russellville, Ala.

A. No. The cut-off date, with a few exceptions, does apply to those discharged from service on or before July 25, 1947.

New Compass Issued Forces in Korea

American forces in Korea have received two new types of compasses designed to assist ground forces in reconnaissance and navigation, and for aiding forward observers in directing fire control, the department of the army has announced. These new instruments are able to withstand the most severe conditions of combat for a long time, and are an improvement over the type used during World War II.

In the first year of military operations in Korea the military sea transportation service of the department of defense carried to the Far East more than 90 per cent of all United States military supplies, nearly all American personnel involved, and troops of seven United Nations members. The service is operated by the navy and was formally organized less than nine months prior to the start of hostilities in Korea.

Plastics Ancient

Plastics are generally considered rather new, but their use goes back well over 100 years. First there was the use of natural resins, gums, shellac, and ceiling-wax. In 1846 cellulose nitrate began to be produced. Progress has been steady in the past century until now, if this were not known as the Atomic Age, it might well be called the Plastics Age. Today's plastic spectacle frames, with their rich variety of styles and colors, are a good example of why plastics are popular.

Moss Menace

Lack of fertility, poor drainage or both cause moss in some lawns. Fertility deficiency is corrected by raking away the moss and fertilizing the bared spots liberally with a special lawn food. Where water gathers because of faulty drainage, this moss-causing factor can be ended by changing the grade. If surface drainage is good but seepage water saturates the subsoil it may be necessary to install tile to end the difficulty.

Cleaning Brushes

The painter who neglects to clean his brushes after they've been used doesn't deserve much sympathy; but at least he deserves a tip on how to recondition his brushes the next time they have to be used. Fill up an old can with vinegar, stick the brushes in it, and put it on the stove until it boils for ten or fifteen minutes. This may cause falling bristles in inferior quality brushes; but it will soften them up considerably, and a good washing should complete the reconditioning.

GOLDEN AGE OF MUSIC

United States Is Most Musical Nation in History of the World

America is beginning a Golden Age. of Music.

This is now the most musical nation in the history of the world; and the trend is typically American, growing out of the people themselves instead of patronage by an upper class.

Some of the signs of our musical renascence are obvious and pervading. More than 96 per cent of our families own radios that pour forth music of various sorts at the flick of a switch. More than 15,000,000 homes have phonographs and records. Every motion picture has music as a backdrop, with the musical film the most popular of all types. In the theater, plays like "Oklahoma," "South Pacific" and "Guys and Dolls" are the record-breakers. In restaurants, offices and hotel lobbies music is piped in to entertain and to relieve monotony.

But the more significant signs that music is coming to have a basic place in our way of life are in the private lives of the people. There are today more adults learning to play instruments, taking part in community orchestras and choruses, joining in music festivals and events than there have been for many years. The number of children who are learning to play instruments in our schools is at an all-time high. Musical colleges report that the number of students preparing to teach music surpasses the proportionate increase in enrollment in other subjects. Attendance at concerts and other musical performances is breaking all records, particularly in the smaller cities and the small towns where such fare was scarce indeed just a few years ago. According to the American Music Conference, there are more than 700 community symphony orchestras in cities of all sizes, including one in Mountain Lakes, N. J.—population 2,500

In adult recreation, music is playing an ever-increasing part. YMCA's and YWCA's in many cities are offering class instruction on various instruments, and service clubs and other groups put on periodic sings, musical events and concert series. Music appreciation is rising toward the top of the list of things many adult organizations are offering their memberships.

The bright fact is that the American people are making music for themselves—a bright fact because throughout history music has been one of the greatest forces for happiness, stability, and harmony among men.

This trend is putting the piano, the organ and the harp back into the home, and the instrument case back into the hands of our children.

THE MUSIC CLUBS and their unifying organization, the National Federation of Music Clubs, have brought music into the lives of thousands of committees and have encouraged young musicians to follow the art seriously. Service clubs like Kiwanis International, Rotary and Lions have helped bands and orchestras, provided scholarships, put on music festivals, added singing to their own programs and otherwise helped make us music conscious. The National Congress of Parents and Teachers' music committees have been behind much of the sharp increase in opportunity for music offered in the schools and for growth of music in community affairs.

In rural areas, the 4-H, extension departments of state universities and other groups have been influential, and in the adult field the YMCA and YWCA have made music prominent in their activities and offered classes on various instruments.

Though it is less than four years old, the American Music Conference has had an important part in the current boom. Financed by various branches of the music industry as a public service, AMC is devoted entirely to helping more people get the benefits of music Much of the tremendous increase in material about music appearing in newspapers, magazines and radio is AMC inspired. Its films and literature are helping to keep the trend moving. Its small field staff is carrying know-how on organization, techniques and materials to cities and towns in all parts of the country. Contributing its services to organizations, school systems and anyone else who wants help to advance music, AMC has increased the effectiveness of many other agencies and has given the total movement a new spark and acceleration.

Much of the credit, too, must go to the music industry. It has found that in this country the way to progress is through service. Both through their contributions to AMC and music educators and by introducing improved products, the manufacturers, distributors and merchants have been instrumental in making music more at home in millions of homes.

THE FICTION CORNER

BENNY'S COW

By Eunice Thomas

3-Minute Fiction

IF you ever saw Mama look at Benny you might know why she wanted a cow so bad. Benny was our second brother, twelve years old, and he looked like he might have been cut out of a scarecrow pattern. Mama blamed it on not having milk.

But Daddy was always getting mad because Benny was afraid or wouldn't fight like the other boys. He said you couldn't blame it on milk. Then Mama's face got sort of tight and she said Benny needed it more than the others

So, at last we got a cow. Uncle Hal brought her home in his truck

Uncle Hal maneuvered his bay window from under the steering wheel and waddled to the back of the truck. Daddy stalked around from the other side. Next to Uncle Hal he looked nearly as underfed as Benny.

"We gotta be careful," Daddy said. "She ain't taking to us strangers too well."

"She looks crazy in her eyes." Uncle Hal poked a finger through a crack and the cow let out a low bellow. "She's scared silly. No telling what she'll do when we turn her loose. Might as well find out, though."

He let down the tail gate and untied the rope from her horns.

"You young'uns get out of the lot!" Daddy yelled at us. "She's upset enough to try to fight."

She came out snorting and pawing and went over the fence to the peanut patch just like it hadn't been there. Uncle Hal climbed the fence with considerable speed, considering his blubber, and took off to drive her back. Daddy ran to head her off the other way. They circled around her, intending to drive her back to the lot. But she was too upset and scared She lowered her head and pointed her long sharp horns straight toward Uncle Hal.

Despite his bulk, Uncle Hal ran. He plowed a path straight to the back field fence.

Despite his bulk, Uncle Hal ran. With his head back and his elbows punishing the spare tire around his middle, he plowed a path straight to the back field fence. He beat the cow there by several yards, but he didn't bother to climb. He fell over, leaving a good sized patch of his overalls on the barb wire

Old Bessie turned her attention to Daddy. He made it to the fence and grabbed a post and swung for safety just as Bessie's horns tangled in the wire below him.

THE COW was tangled in the wire and bucking Uncle Hal was peeping from behind a nearby oak. The rest of us were atop fence posts.

Daddy was mad enough to shoot Bessie then and there, but she was a summer's profit. He couldn't afford to harm her or let her hurt herself. He hollered for Mama to send the wire pliers.

Before she could speak to one of the other boys Benny was half way to the house. And he took the pliers to Daddy.

"Watch that cow!" Daddy yelled at him. "She could make hash of you in no time!"

Benny went on. The cow had calmed down some and he got pretty close to her.

"Git Back!" Uuncle Hal yelled. "When a cow is that crazy—"

"She ain't skeered o' me, Daddy!" Benny reached out a hand and caressed the cow's quivering side. You could see her relaxing. He rubbed her back a minute and worked up to her shoulders. The restless hoof quit pawing and she stood there trembling while Benny tied a rope around her horns. Daddy started to cut the wire and she reared up again. So he went and leaned on Uncle Hal's oak and tossed the pliers back to Benny.

"All right, son. Cut her loose. She's all yours."

Benny roped her—by himself—and led her into the lot.

"Sure. Now can you stop thinking of your son as a coward and admit he has—ah—" Mama stopped and started turning pink. She was always mighty careful of what she said.

Daddy laughed at her. "Okay Suzie. We'll call it intostinal fortitude."

MIRROR Of Your MIND

Childless Couples Can Be Happy

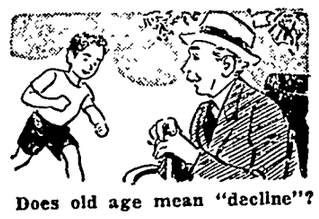
By Lawrence Gould

Is a childless marriage bound to be unhappy?

Answer: Certainly not. The larger percentage of divorces among childless couples seems to have three main factors: (1) the fact that such couples feel more free to separate if they wish to· (2) the lack of a common interest to hold them together, and (3) the self-centeredness which most often leads to a deliberate refusal to have children. But two people who sincerely love each other can find many interests in common besides children, and all couples need such interests when their children grow up. Marriage itself is a bigger, more enduring thing than parenthood and need not be dependent on it.

May childbirth be too painless?

Answer: Yes, says Dr. Helene Deutsch in her book, "The Psychology of Women." The modern obstetrical technique known as spinal or "caudal" anesthesia leaves the mother free from pain and able to observe her child's birth as impersonally as if it were happening to someone else. But "something is missing"—there is little or no sense of achievement. "From the psychological point of view, this type of delivery has the advantage of happy reunion with the child and freedom from the aftermath of narcosis But the absence of feeling of accomplishment is very marked," though "the woman usually does not realize this till later."



Does old age mean "decline"?

Answer: Not in all respects, by any means, says Dr. Edward J. Stieglitz, noted pioneer in geriatrics (study of old-age diseases). Powers of endurance, judgement and ability to understand may increase with age—the main question is how we can make the aging person feel that it is worth his while to remain active and interested. Clinical experience shows that there is more danger of the average older man or woman wearing out from disuse than from being over-active. Aging people need love and affection, but they need still more to feel that they are "needed" and that—as is generally true—they can still do some kinds of work "as well as ever."

TOMATOES TOPS

CALL 'EM fruit, or call 'em vegetable; grow 'em yourself, or buy 'em at your store—tomatoes are tops in popularity! Food authorities figure that the average American citizen every year eats about 70 whole tomatoes, fresh or home-canned; drinks at least 9 large cups of commercially canned tomatoes; 13 cups of soup and juice; and consumes 9 cups of pulp, puree, paste, sauce, catsup or chili sauce Did you ever stop to figure how many ways this national favorite is part of your daily life?

So here's good news to you tomato-lovers. Commercial production in the United States from late spring into September is expected to be about 1,641,000 bushels more than in 1950, though in some states both the truck and the home gardens have suffered.

This generally-increased crop is heralded by the luscious Texas type, but coming closer to home and the home-market every warm day, in your own or the commercial gardens!

The glamorous, but comparatively tasteless hot-house variety is now retiring in favor of the fruit picked green in Texas and the south, and ripened and packaged by northern buyers. As the summer marches along, however, the green import will ripen naturally on the way to market. So you won't find so many of those intriguing transparent cartons, but you'll be able to pick them in bulk at your grocers.

With each succeeding day, more ripened tomatoes will find the way to your grocer from the truck gardens. And that's the time that tomatoes are tops—midsummer into early fall. That's the time they'll be most abundant, most economical, and most rich in vitamin content. That's the time to brighten your summer salads with the gay red of fresh tomatoes. And it won't be long before your own will mature.

When you go to your store to buy these beauties, be wise to quality Good tomatoes are well-shaped, plump, smooth, firm, of good red color, and blemish-free. For cooking or canning, the shape is less important, and if the fruit is solid with the exception of a little bruise, it needn't be wasted. Remember there are infinite varieties of uses.

MODERATION EVEN HERE

If the fruit needs some ripening, don't force it, by exposing it to excessive sunlight, but in a corner not warmer than 60 to 70 degrees. If you take the ripening in stride like this, so will the tomatoes. Also, don't chance putting underripe tomatoes in the refrigerator, for the chill halts the ripening process, and makes the tomatoes watery. Moderation in all things covers even the treatment of tomatoes!

Annual Muskie Race Is Won by Wisconsin Town

HAYWARD, Wis.—The town of Hayward (population 1500), striving to prove its assumed title of muskie city of the world, took a big gamble recently, but won out.

Striving to get the jump on other communities, the town sent its mayor and muskie queen to Madison to present the governor with the first muskie caught when the season opened. The delegation arrived in Madison before the season opened.

Back at home an airplane stood by to transport the first fish to the state capital as soon as it was caught.

The season opened but the mayor and muskie queen received no word that a fish had been caught. They waited. They paced the floor. Then came a telegram from Hayward that a fish had been caught. It was flown to Madison. The mayor and muskie queen rushed to the airport to greet the fish and then to the governor.

The presented the first fish of the season to the governor and Hayward takes the title of muskie city of the world.

Congress As Prodigal With Tax Money As Truman

By Wright A. Patterson

FOLLOWING the close of four years of civil war our national debt amounted to two billion, two hundred million. That had been reduced to one billion at the start of World War I. At the close of World War I, our debt was 25 billion, 200 million. We had reduced that to 19 billion, 600 million by 1929. That total of 1929 represented $571 for each American family. By 1939, with no war, but the New Deal to finance, our national debt had increased to where it represented $1,165 for each family. In 1950, our national debt amounted to 257 billion, 400 million, a total for each family of $6,786.

With such a financial condition facing us, with a debt burden and taxes higher than at any time in our national history, congress continues to spend money "like a drunken sailor." Only recently, the senate voted an authorization for an Arizona irrigation project, the total cost of which will amount to considerably more than two billion dollars. That irrigation will benefit less than 30,000 farmers, for which all the people of all states will be taxed to an extent of nearly $3,000, to be added to the $6,786 each family is now slated to pay.

That is not the kind of economy candidates for both the senate and house promised the voters before the last election, when economy was an issue in the campaign, but it represents the kind we are getting. The senators who voted for authorization for such a project should not be allowed to go back to Washington. A two-billion-dollar project that would benefit 30,000 Arizona farmers, but would seriously endanger the water supply of close to 5,000,000 people in southern California, who have at tremendous expense to themselves carried the water of the Colorado river through the mountains and over the deserts that they might live, should be voted down Now the senate proposes to give away that water to 30,000 Arizona farmers at a cost to the families of all states of $3,000 per family.

That is spending on a scale that neither the New Deal or the Fair Deal have suggested, and it came directly from the senate without a recommendation from the President. It was not a partisan measure. It was voted for by both Democrats and Republicans.

Fortunately that was only an authorization. The Senate cannot inaugurate appropriation legislation as that must start in the house. And it is not believed that such an appropriation has any chance of passage in the house. Such an incident, futile though it may be, demonstrates that the spending proclivities cannot all be laid to the President. Some of it must be attributed to congress, and there both parties must assume a portion of the blame.

That would-be Arizona expenditure is but a large sized sample of the utterly unexplainable and needless expenditures made by Washington. A careful check of the voting in both senate and house will demonstrate that those who are loudest in their demands for economy will, at times, be found supporting appropriations for things we could get along without. Among such things is the central California Valley reclamation project of no value to any one other than the people of California, but being paid for by the tax payers of all states. Senator Knowland's denunciation of that Arizona project was but a case of "the pot calling the kettle black." Can we not have an end to all such needless federal government spendings?

While under the set-up of the legislative branch of the government, it is not possible for the senate to inaugurate either tax or appropriation legislation, the senate can, when it will, stop such legislation, when passed by the house. Senator George (D., Georgia), as chairman of the tax committee of the senate, has refused consideration of the house tax bill, until the house has cut from its appropriation not less than six billions of peace time expenditures.

KEEPING HEALTHY

Lazy Thyroid Can Cause Slowness

By Dr. James W. Barton

ONE OF THE TRAGEDIES that occurs to some parents is finding that their child is mentally defective. It is suspected that in many cases this is due to lack of activity of the thyroid gland in the neck, and use of thyroid extract has proved helpful.

In the American Journal of Diseases of Children, Dr. A. Topper reports the following-up of 20 cretins, hypothyroids (children born with underactivity of the thyroid gland) for one to 25 years. There were six boys and 14 girls. Only one of the children had developed hypothyroidism after birth. Dried thyroid gland extract had been given them. The individual dosage varied from case to case and from time to time. Psychiatric or mental tests revealed that seven remained mentally defective despite adequate treatment. Why some cases improved mentally and others did not, despite sufficient doses of thyroid extract, was thoroughly investigated by studying the brain waves in these seven patients and on six who had reached a normal level of intelligence. Five of the seven who had remained defective showed abnormal brain waves whereas the six who had reached a normal level of intelligence had normal brain waves.

Dr. Topper believes that when these studies are made in infancy they can be of great importance to the physician and parents, as no amount of thyroid extract can help the cases in which the brain waves are not normal, whereas if the brain wave test—electroencephalogram shows a normally functioning brain, persistent and adequate treatment by thyroid extract can bring about normal mentality even when the child was born with an underactive thyroid gland.

Strongly backed by President Truman, Johnston made his plea for strong wage-price legislation as an unfriendly house opened debate on an amendment-riddled controls bill that the administration feared would hamper the inflation fight.

Color Query

One of the most devastating arguments in favor of fishes' ability to recognize colors came out of tests conducted by the scientists Kottgen and Abelsdorf. In all eyes—human, fish, and other animal—the only identified substance which permits color perception is a chemical known as rhodopsin; by comparative tests of rhodopsin from human and fish eyes, these scientists found that each had virtually the same qualities.

The fishing tackle business has reacted to the color argument with enthusiasm. Anglers can buy lures in practically any color of the spectrum for the purpose of attracting fish. A whole lot less attention has been paid to another important color angle, however—the use of color in lines to hide their presence in the water.

Many dry-fly fishermen will use only light colors in their lines. They believe that since a fish normally sees a dry-fly like as it lies on top of the water—silhouetted against the sky—light colors are less noticeable and thus less likely to spook the quarry.

Bait-casting lines are, of course, a different story. They have no floating qualities and they are much more finely calibrated than fly lines. Therefore, the possibility of their casting a shadow in the water is considerably lessened. However, the color of a bait-casting line may very well be of far greater importance than that of a fly line. This is because a sunken bait-line comes directly into a fish's view.

By far the most commonly used color in bait-lines is, at present, black. There is no apparent explanation for this; black is certainly not a shade calculated to blend in with all types of water. Nor is it a shade which fish can't see. If bass, for example, were totally oblivious to black, there would be small point indeed to fishing for them with black plugs—which actually are notable bass killers under some conditions.

Lotta Tuna!

Lt. James Lynch, South Orange, N. J. (the gentleman with the rod) took this 682-lb. tuna at Bimini on June 5. The tuna was the largest taken at Cat Bay or Bimini this season. Lynch was using a Cortland 39-thread Supereuty linen line, a line which, in varying thread strengths took many record fish during the season.

More About Carp

Contrary to popular opinion carp are not vegetarians. Tom Moen, fisheries biologist for the Iowa Conservation Commission, in the examination of 739 carp stomachs during 1946 through 1949, found that carp of all sizes and ages feed principally on animal material. The food falls into three groups, insect larvae, crustaceans, and mollusks.

Game fish egg predation is, in the popular mind, one of the principal objections to carp. Moen found that carp do take walleye eggs during the spawning period. From 37 carp collected in April in Spirit Lake, one contained three walleye eggs. On analysis of 51 stomachs no eggs were found in Spirit Lake, while of two carp from Okoboji, 9 walleye eggs were found in one stomach.

Winter food studies on 167 carp from four Iowa lakes reveals that there is considerable feeding during winter months, with animal organisms making up 100 per cent of the diet, with only traces of plant material found. During winter, both the volume of food and the per cent of stomachs containing food was found to be considerably less than during the summer.

Hook Disgorging

The job of extracting a deeply-swallowed hook from the throat of a fish isn't the tough job it used to be. Many alert manufacturers have taken pains to provide anglers with a means for making this formerly messy job more desirable. They have made a simple and effective hook remover of a metal tube with a slot down one side. The line is slipped in the slot and the tube is slid on down the hook. Only a slight twisting frees the hook.

No Free Lunch

Lesson for August 5, 1951

YOU cannot find the words "economic relations" in the Bible, but you cannot find the word "humanity" in the Bible either. Yet you would not say that the Bible has no message for humanity, and if you say that it has nothing to say about the economic life, it shows you have not thought what the words mean.

Dr. Foreman

"Economic relations" is an expression for everything that goes into life from a business or money standpoint, everything we buy and use, make or raise or manufacture or sell. Money's not everything, but money's into everything.

The Bible speaks about life, including the economic aspect of life. Nobody can live for a day without having some kind of economic relations, or sin (as a hobo does) by not having them.

No Free Lunch

ONE vital part of our economic life is earning a living. A learned professor of economics said that the whole subject can be put into one short sentence: "There is no free lunch." He meant, of course, that everything has to be paid for, by somebody, some time.

You may get your board "free," but everything on the table costs somebody something, and if you are not paying for it, some one else must.

Now the Bible teaches that every one who is able to do so, should earn his living. Saint Paul made a rule for his churches: "He that will not work, neither let him eat."

That sounds hard-boiled, but makes sense The Bible has no use for the hobo, the loafer, the "moocher," the "grifter," the person who thinks the world owes him a living The world owes no one a living.

The Right to Work

IF it is the duty of all of us to earn our board and keep, on the other hand the world ought to give us the opportunity to do so. Along with the duty of earning a living goes the right to earn a living.

We saw, some weeks ago, that a basic Christian principle for right living is the value of individual persons. This holds good for economics as well as for all other areas of life.

What happens to the man who cannot earn a living? If he becomes an "object of charity," in a short while he loses ambition and self-respect. And if he gets no charity, he starves.

So any system or arrangement of society, or any action or condition permanent or temporary, making it impossible for a man to earn his own living, is harmful to human persons and therefore sinful No one, in short, has a right to a living, but every one has the right to earn a living.

The Risks of Riches

SO far, you might say that Christianity only says what everybody with common sense can see for himself. But Christianity goes further and says something that most people forget: that getting rich is more dangerous than desirable

The Bible urges us all to earn our own way; but it does not urge us to get rich. Christ warns us that life does not consist in the "abundance of things" a man possesses. There is no virtue in being as poor as possible.

Still, on the other hand, the more a man's property piles up, the more he is tempted to certain sins: the sin of greed, wanting more than our share, more than we can wisely use; the sin of pride, wanting to have more than any one else in sight; the sin of selfishness, wanting to use what we have for our own benefit exclusively, the sin of hoarding, wanting to fill barns or bank accounts for no particular reason except just to see the pile grow; the sin of materialism, measuring success in terms of dollars.

The main question is: Why do we want it? To have something good, or to do good with it? The big Christian question about every relationship and transaction, economic and otherwise, is a question about people. What is this going to do to people? To me? To those who depend on me? To the community?

Pope Pius XII used two words about the economic life which Protestants will agree are of top importance: Make it more human, he said, and more Christian.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Leave your spring flowering bulbs undisturbed until the tops have turned yellow and died down. When cutting blooms, allow the plants to retain as much foliage as possible Divide clumps of chrysanthemums, hardy asters and phlox. As they grow, pinch out the centers of the plants to make them bushy.

Watch iris for signs of the iris borer and cut and burn all affected parts. Give the plants an application of complete plant food, working it around the roots and thoroughly soaking it into the soil.

Hot cereal may be kept free of lumps in cooking by sprinkling the dry cereal slowly into the boiling water and by stirring as the cereal swells.

Self-rising flour is both an all-purpose and a cake flour containing leavening and salt.

Versatile ready-to-eat cereals may be used in candies, crumb crusts, pancakes and meat loaves

Fine dry bread crumbs are used in poultry stuffings and casserole toppings while soft bread crumbs may be used for fruit betty and poultry stuffing.

The color of tea is a poor guide to its strength. Taste is the final test.

A successful conventional-type cake depends partly on the creaming of the shortening and sugar.

Corn syrup may be used in home-made ice cream to prevent large ice crystals.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

Question: Will you please tell me how I can finish a dining-room set in the new gray finish that is so popular? The grain has a little white tint to it.

Answer: Clean and smooth the wood by rubbing with fine sandpaper; then wipe with turpentine. The wood is then colored with a gray stain, used as directed on the label of the container. Finish with two coats of a top grade of quick-drying varnish. When the first coat is hard and dry, dull the gloss by rubbing lightly with very fine (00) sandpaper; then dust off and apply the finish coat. Experiment first on some odd pieces of board to get the right color and effect. Paint dealers handling a full line of wood finishing materials can supply the stain.

Mrs. Mayo

It is difficult to properly describe the way that you feel, and nobody can fully understand just how miserable annoying aches and pains can make you unless they have had these troubles. Mrs. Leona Mayo, 12505 Bennington Ave., Cleveland, Ohio, knows what it means to suffer from annoying aches and pains and lack of appetite. But she doesn't suffer any more, for Mrs. Mayo took HADACOL and HADACOL will help you, if you have those annoying aches and pains due to a deficiency of Vitamins B1, B2, Iron and Niacin.

AND LISTEN TO THIS! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps keep such painful distress from returning when caused by such deficiencies. Now that's the kind of product you have been waiting for. That's the kind you should buy and start taking at once, and HADACOL'S wonderful Vitamins and Minerals come in special pleasant liquid form so they are quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work at once

Treasurer McMillin Gives Figures On Klemme Taxes

McMILLIN SHOWS HOW TAX COLLECTED IN KLEMME IS SPENT

Klemme Schools Take Out The Biggest Chunk Of Taxes Collected Here

County Treasurer Roy L. McMillin has provided The Klemme Times with an interesting article on how the tax money collected in the Town of Klemme is spent.

As an illustration, Mr. McMillin uses a home in Klemme valued at $2,904.00, which would be taxed a total of $197.97, less a homestead credit of $62.50, which is paid by the State from the fund collected through the 2% sales tax.

After deducting the homestead credit this would leave a total tax of $135.47 to be paid by the taxpayer. This homestead exemption is allowed only where the home is occupied by the owner, and is the most that can be allowed any taxpayer. The Homestead Credit is figured at 25 mills on the assessment value up to $2,500.

If you are a home owner, and live in your home and the value is $2,904.00, your tax money is divided as follows:

If this tax was paid with no exemptions it would be credited to the following accounts.

HOSPITAL FOR HANCOCK TOPS PRIORITY LIST

Britt — The Hancock County Memorial hospital project is now at the top of the list in priority for federal funds, Erwin I. Buck, chairman of the county board of hospital trustees has announced.

Buck made the announcement after being called to Des Moines where he met with F. W. Pickworth, associate director, division of hospital services, state department of health, and Charles Altfillisch, architect of Decorah.

Appropriations by the federal government for hospital construction are expected to be made in September and when the funds for Iowa are available the proposed hospital will receive its share.

Buck stated that the preliminary request for the funds must be made by August 29 and the board of trustees was now preparing the necessary papers for the request.

The amount of federal aid granted to the hospital will be based on the amount of money which the county has on hand for construction when the request is approved.

For every two dollars on hand, one dollar will be allowed by the federal government. So the more money raised by the county the more federal aid will be granted.

Persons who have agreed to make a donation and have signed notes to that effect are urged to pay the notes now if they can possibly do so.

The board of trustees must show that 90% of the money is in cash. Federal aid will not be granted on money received after the application is approved.

The board of trustees will undoubtedly ask for bids on the hospital contruction not later than Jan 1, 1952, and it is hoped that the hospital will be completed by the end of 1952

Loss of life in Iowa fires reached 158 last year for a new all-time death loss and caused a total damage of $9,303,098 to Iowa property.

Of the known causes of Iowa's 1950 fires, defective electric wiring topped all others. Loss from the 230 fires of that type was $698,502.

That's why your Iowa Safety Congress warns: Frayed wires cause FIRES!

How's the wiring in your home? If there are any worn or frayed places in any of the wiring in your house, there's a potential fire that may destroy your home, your family and you!

Check the wiring in your home today, so you won't have to call the fire department tomorrow!

Klemme Shoppers Enjoyed Main Street Entertainment

KLEMME HAD THE APPEARANCE OF A CARNIVAL SAT. EVE

Double Band Concert, Band Mothers Did Land Office Business

The central business block in Klemme, which was closed to traffic Saturday night, had all the appearances of a big carnival with a big crowd present for the festivities, which included a concert by Bethke's Old Timer Band of Garner, another concert by the Klemme School Band, and an ice cream social put on by the band mothers.

The band mothers served home-made ice cream, cake, pie and coffee and despite the vast amount of food they had, they sold out completely and did a big business. They had a large number of tables and chairs in a large area on Main Street and their was plenty of seating room for everyone. A large number of seats were also provided for those who listened to the band concert.

The Old Timers Band was the principle attraction and they put on a good entertainment and were loudly applauded for their snappy playing and popular selections.

In all, the evening was a great success and everybody had a good time. After the band concert the Old Timers enjoyed treats set up by the Civic Club.

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

Frank was a planner. He always knew where he was going and how he would get there. Being on time was his talent, and he probably never made a purely impulsive move in his 51 years.

People who remember him like to tell how he would pull out a smooth worn watch, glance at it briefly, then give it a quick, affirmative nod like a man agreeing in perfect understanding with an old friend.

So in love with making closely timed plans was Frank that often when he had to travel the state he would leave his car at home with his wife, prefering to work out neat connections with trains and buses along the way.

That was why he felt so confident and successful that warm afternoon as he sat eating a sandwich in a lunchroom along the highway. He was about to make a clever connection.

He had figured out that by catching a bus at this little waystation, he could arrive at his destination an hour earlier than expected. And that was the sort of thing that made him happy.

The bus was due - out came the watch - in exactly three minutes. Frank picked up his bag, stepped firmly from the lunchroom, and walked to the edge of the highway where he stood in the shade cast by a large truck parked while the driver ate dinner. The bus would stop on the opposite side of the road.

It must have been a minor triumph for Frank when the bus arrived right on time for he stepped out from behind the truck and onto the highway with the long stride of a man who knew exactly where he was going.

But he didn't know. He had no idea The car that hit him and killed him had not been considered in his plans at all.

Hancock County 4-H Show Next Monday & Tuesday

HIDDEN TAXES By Gerald Bogan

The recent report that Iowans paid 27 percent more in direct federal taxes during the past fiscal year tells only part of the story. It is costing Iowans considerably more than $437,993,891 as their share of big and expanding government in Washington.

The considerably more is in scores of hidden takes, and it is estimated that Iowans paid $250,000,000 in those taxes you don't know you're paying.

That would make a total federal tax bill for Iowans of about 668 million dollars, or nearly double the state and local taxes paid during the year for operation of local governments, schools and state agencies.

Those hidden taxes, paid at the source and pyramided as they are passed on to the consumer, range from 8 cents on a quart of milk and 5 cents on a loaf of bread, to $700 on a $2,100 car and $3,000 on a 10,000 house.

Your total tax bill doesn't show up on the withholding slip, the receipt from the internal revenue office or your bank stubs. But you're paying, and the cost of federal government is rising by leaps and bounds.

Here's just one example of the sharp rise in costs under the Truman administration. In 1923 the budget for operating the White House was $311,480 and there were 31 employees on the payroll. During President Roosevelt's third term, the cost had jumped to $528,690 and he had a staff of 53. But when Harry sent his budget to Congress it was for $2,614,215, a five-fold increase over 1923, and the payroll showed a staff of 293. In other words, operating expenses of the White House have jumped 700 percent in three decades.

It is interesting to note that while Harry Truman asks the nation to sacrifice during the emergency, he doesn't make a move to cut down operation of the White House. Practicing what they preach might be a good policy for Truman and his advisors to follow.

Remember this: You're paying for the high cost of government in Washington, paying for it in heavy direct taxes and heavy hidden taxes.

Two Affairs

HERE IS A LETTER from a man to call him that for the moment. Lew Arnold lives in an Arkansas city, and is 43. Some years ago he fell in love with one of the girls in the office, but "I did not ask my wife for a divorce," says his letter, "because I knew she would refuse me." The boss always knows that, incidentally.

He and this girl, Vera, shortly became lovers, and he says he did everything short of marriage to make her position right. Vera was evidently a good office worker, for she went straight ahead, and was promoted steadily. Two years ago she bore him a son, going to live with an aunt in the country for a year, after which she resumed her office work, now being herself at the head of a smaller office.

When the baby was two months old Vera married a young sailor who was dying of anemia in a service hospital giving her baby his name with "junior" attached. The last few months of her husband's life she nursed him devotedly, and evidently he died satisfied with his bargain.

Affair Discovered

Vera was satisfied with hers, too, for while she never pretended to feel anything but sympathy and gratitude for the man who had given his name to her baby, she never would have anything to do with Lew again. Lew's wife, who was childless learning of the affair and the baby, did divorce him, and has remarried, so that the way is clear for Lew now.

But not for Vera. She firmly refuses to consider any relationship with Lew at all, and his letter to me is a frantic plea to ask her to marry him, and to give him the right to raise his own boy.

Vera hasn't written me. If she had I think I would tell her that under the circumstances she would only jeopardize her own and her child's happiness and security by putting the slightest faith in any promises from Lew. Whether she was fully aware of what she did or not, she has neatly turned the tables on Lew, and I think he deserves being ignored completely from now on. Some other office girl will eventually console Lew, although, being free, he will probably move more warily now. I have no advice at all for him.

This case reminds me of one so sad and so incredible that I feel anger rising whenever I think of it. It began some years ago with a letter from a girl of 20, who wrote me that she was desperately in love with the office boss, whose wife of course never had understood him, but was clinging to him for sheer spite. Francie consoled the boss in his desolate situation, and he rented a small apartment for her. She left a good father and mother and two brothers to suffer the shame of it; she never saw them again.

Dangerous Abortion

For two years the boss had Francie and Francie had the boss. Then she had a dangerous abortion, for which, she wrote me, Paul paid. And then the unbelievable happened, and the wife of the boss was removed by death. Francie's loving heart couldn't help singing; the way seemed clear now.

But Paul didn't see it that way. He wanted a little freedom before he married Francie. Her bloom, he reminded her, had somewhat worn off with illness and tears, and he asked her to invite various pretty girls up from the office, for dinners which Francie cooked, so that he might look them over.

And if any woman cannot believe this, I can only give her my personal word that it is the exact truth. Francie's explanation to me was that so high was Paul's sense of honor that he dared not marry until he was absolutely sure of his true and loyal love for the woman he made his wife. And suddenly he married a rather rich woman some years his senior, and gave Francie money enough to get to California. She had developed a dry, tight cough and was growing alarmingly thin.

So Francie came to San Francisco, to the big tubercular ward of the City Hospital, and it was from that place that she wrote me again, and I saw her often after that, during the two years she lived. She told me lovingly more than once what she thought of Paul; he had known that she was not well enough to be a good wife to him, and for the sake of his two daughters and his job he had thought it wisest to send her where she could get well. I never told her what I thought of Paul.

What kind of a dog is it?

Well, his father was an airedale, but his mother was a female, so I don't just know what he is.

Don't Blame Him

I bought him for a lap dog but they lied to me.

What makes you think so?

Because the first time I sat on his lap he bit me.

Stumped

My dachshund died.

Too, bad! What happened?

He met his end going around a tree.

Alert

Is he a good watch dog.

Rather. If you hear a suspicious noise at night you have only to wake him and he begins to bark.

That's Right

I think men should wear something to show they're married. Women wear rings to show they're married.

Men wear something to show they're married. They wear last year's clothes.

Thrifty Pet

I know a dog worth seven thousand dollars.

How could a dog save so much?

Not a Cow Dog

Is that a bull dog?

Oh, my, no—it's a female.

Joke Died Too

My dog swallowed a tape worm and died by inches.

That's nothing, my dog crawled in on my bed and died by the foot.

I had another dog that went out of the house and died by the yard.

Didn't Like It

I shot my dog.

Was he mad?

Well, it didn't seem to exactly please him.

Make a Flavorsome Supper with Curried Shrimp
(See Recipes Below)

Delicious Seafoods

MOST HOMEMAKERS don't mind trying something different, provided it's good. If it's delicious to eat as well as a saving on the budget, then there's more than ample reason for trying a new recipe.

Seafood, cooked properly, is one of the most important of food budget aids. Besides being plentiful, it's available in fresh, frozen or canned form, so you're certain to find several varieties at the store at all times.

You'll be glad at the opportunity of having interesting meals at budgetary prices with the use of seafood. At the same time, the family will be delighted to get away from menus that are "the same old thing."

Curried Shrimp on Rice is a good way to start off on seafoods because the flavor is intriguing, and the nourishing eggs and milk with shrimp makes this a good main dish, rich in protein:

Shrimp Curry Au Gratin
(Serves 6)

- ¼ cup butter
- ⅓ cup finely diced onion
- ½ cup diced celery
- 6 tablespoons flour
- 1½ teaspoons salt
- 1 teaspoon curry powder
- ⅛ teaspoon ginger
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 3 cups milk, scalded
- 1½ pounds shrimp, cooked and cleaned
- 3 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 cup grated cheese
- 4 cups boiled rice

Melt butter, add onions and celery and cook until tender, while stirring. Blend in flour, salt, curry powder, ginger and sugar. Gradually add hot milk, while stirring, and cook until thickened, stirring the whole time. Add shrimp, lemon juice and half of the cheese. Heat through. Turn into individual casseroles, containing rice, then sprinkle with remaining grated cheese. Broil to melt cheese.

CRABMEAT AND MUSHROOMS make a thoroughly delightful combination especially when the sauce is rich and well-seasoned. Golden brown, French fried noodles are the accompaniment:

Crab and Mushrooms
(Serves 6)

- 2 cans crabmeat
- 3 tablespoons fat
- 3 tablespoons flour
- 1 cup chicken stock
- ½ cup cream
- ½ pound mushrooms
- ½ cup Parmesan cheese, grated
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- ⅛ teaspoon paprika
- 1 cup crisp noodles

Melt fat, add flour and stir until well-blended. Gradually pour in the chicken stock, then the cream, stirring constantly. Bring to the boiling point and add crabmeat and mushrooms which have been sauteed in butter. As soon as the mixture is thoroughly heated, add cheese, salt, pepper and paprika. Garnish with crisp noodles or serve in pastry shells or on toast points.

Baked Scallops
(Serves 4)

- 1 onion
- 1 green pepper
- 6 stalks celery
- 6 mushrooms
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1 pint scallops
- 2 cups medium white sauce or 1 can condensed mushroom soup
- Salt, Paprika, Nutmeg
- Lemon juice
- Grated Swiss cheese, if desired

Cut onion, pepper, celery and mushrooms into small pieces and cook until tender in butter. To this add scallops and heat thoroughly over low heat. Pour hot sauce or heated mushroom soup over all and mix gently. Season to taste with salt, paprika, nutmeg and lemon juice. Pour into buttered casserole (1-quart size) and cover with a generous layer of grated Swiss cheese. Bake in a moderate (350°F.) oven until golden brown, about 25 minutes.

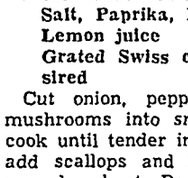
HALIBUT IS an excellent fish to use for molded salad since the flesh is so firm. Either leftover or freshly boiled fish may be used for this:

Halibut Salad Mold
(Serves 4)

- 1½ tablespoons flour
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 2 teaspoons mustard
- 2 teaspoons sugar
- 1 egg
- ½ cup evaporated milk
- 5 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 tablespoon gelatin
- ¼ cup cold water
- ¼ teaspoon celery salt
- 1 cup cooked, flaked halibut
- ½ cup heavy cream, whipped

Place flour, salt, mustard and sugar in top part of double boiler. Add egg, slightly beaten, evaporated milk and lemon juice. Stir over hot water until mixture thickens. Soften gelatin in cold water, then add to mixture in double boiler. Add celery salt and halibut. Mix well and let cool. Fold in whipped cream; turn into mold and chill until firm. Serve on lettuce, garnished with olives and pimiento strips.



Deviled Sardines
(Serves 4)

- 2 cans boneless sardines
- 2 tablespoons butter
- ¼ teaspoon dry mustard
- 1 teaspoon worcestershire sauce
- ½ cup fine cracker crumbs
- 1 lemon

Drain oil from sardines. Cream butter and work in mustard and worcestershire sauce. Mash sardines and add to butter mixture with cracker crumbs. Place into shells or a shallow baking pan and broil until golden brown. Serve with lemon quarters.

LYNN SAYS:
Refresh your Menus With These Combinations

Freeze fruit juices and use them scooped on top of fresh fruit salads to give them extra special interest.

A tasty, hearty hot weather sandwich uses deviled ham on toast. This is topped with egg salad and another piece of toast.

An easy cheese sauce uses processed American cheese melted with a bit of rich milk. Add some sliced olives to this and serve as a delectable sauce for cauliflower.

Fruits and berries do not have to be canned with a sugar and water syrup, if desired. Fruit juice may be used in place of the syrup, extracting the juice, sweetening it or not, if preferred.

Slice your large and luscious fruits for salad. Serve with a simple and delightful dressing made of honey and lemon juice.

Using baking powder biscuit dough, cut rings out of the dough, and bake as biscuits. Serve with creamed fish, chicken or egg and garnish with broiled bacon strips.

MIRROR Of Your MIND

Understanding Not Everyone's Goal

By Lawrence Gould

Is "understanding" what we really want?

Answer: Probably not. What the average person who complains, "Nobody understands me!" means is that no one else accepts the alibis with which he tries to excuse his shortcomings, or devises new excuses for him as a doting mother may do for her children. To most people, the idea of being really understood—which includes being "seen through"—is more frightening than reassuring, as any psychologist discovers in everyday social contacts. This is not because we are "worse" than we dare to admit, but because our childish "guilt complexes" make most of us feel unconsciously that we are much worse than we actually are.

Can a person become "temporarily insane"?

Answer: Beyond doubt some otherwise sane people may in certain kinds of situations be aroused to such intense fear and hatred that they are incapable of thinking of the consequences of their actions, but to call the husband who kills an unfaithful wife (or vice versa) "temporarily insane" merely emphasizes the absurdity of the legal definition of sanity. Inability to control one's emotions is childish, not "insane" and the basic question in the case of such a person is not whether he is guilty of a crime, but whether or not he is too unstable to leave at large in the community.

Are adolescents often mentally ill?

Answer: Not seriously, says Dr. J. Roswell Gallagher of Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. But a large proportion of them have minor emotional disturbances which may become serious later, if not wisely handled. Failure in school may involve more serious problems than the average parent realizes, and the reasons for it should be carefully and sympathetically studied. To dispose of it by calling a teen-ager "just lazy" or "stupid" when he really is disturbed because he cannot win recognition from his schoolmates not only is unfair but may cripple him emotionally for years to come.

KEEPING HEALTHY

Adjustment of Appetite to Work

By Dr. James W. Barton

IN THE AVERAGE INDIVIDUAL in good health the body adjusts itself to the food intake and the food intake adjusts itself to the work done by the body. It is known that normally about 90 per cent of the food eaten is absorbed from the bowel, regardless of the size of the meal. Accordingly, the only means available for the body automatically to adjust food intake to the needs is by the appetite.

We know that normally our daily intake of food is adjusted to the daily output of energy or work. Men engaged in heavy physical work usually have greater appetites and consume more food than men who sit most of the day or do very light work. The same individual automatically increases or decreases his food intake in periods of increased and decreased muscular activity.

The adjustment of appetite to increased amount of work is usually very prompt in that hunger may follow the increased amount of activity almost immediately while decrease of work or activity may not cause a prompt corresponding decrease of appetite. This explains why so many men who work or play hard and then begin to give up exercise or physical work find that although they have less need for food, they continue to eat the same large amounts and so increase in weight.

On the other hand, when an individual has been sick or under mental or emotional strain and has lost much weight, when he recovers he develops an appetite that is greater than before his loss of weight from illness or strain. Evidently in this state, adjustment of appetite to work done is overruled by a special factor which causes the individual to eat more than his output of work or energy. When, in this way, his habitual or usual weight has been restored, the adjustment of appetite to actual work done resumes its usual condition.

Praise of Children

Praise should not be doled out to a child like chocolate candy—one piece at a time. Dr. Martin L. Reymert, consultant for the service and director of the Mooseheart laboratory for child research at Mooseheart, Illinois, stresses the importance of "encouraging the little successes of our little ones, along the way."

Writer's Friend

The saying "Birds of a feather flock together," probably never was more true of anyone than Louisa May Alcott, author of "Little Women," "Jo's Boys" and other famous children's books. Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry Thoreau and Nathaniel Hawthorne, were counted among the friends of her childhood days in the historic old town of Concord, Massachusetts.

Religious Ardor

Because of the religious ardor of a king named Asoka, the dome-type of architecture characteristic of India during the Third Century B.C., was spread nearly half-way 'round the world. Asoka "felt it his duty to convert all mankind to Buddhism." He sent missionary monks to Burma, Ceylon, Java, Syria, Egypt, and many more lands. The Aryan dome or "stupa" which he had made an emblem of faith, spread to these lands with Buddhism. From it evolved the pagodas seen today in China, Korea, and Japan.

It is estimated that a car traveling 60 miles an hour is capable of doing nine times as much damage to property, people and itself as one going 20 miles per hour.

Terramycin—New Miracle Drug

A fifth partner—terramycin—has been added to the list of new antibiotic drugs which stifle the life processes of germs so sick people can get well.

The new drug is a purified form of a chemical produced by a particular soil mold. It is an effective weapon against blood poisoning, virus pneumonia, whooping cough, tonsillitis, strep throat, amoebic dysentery, shingles, flu and venereal diseases.

Terramycin was discovered by chemists of Charles Pfizer & Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., who turned it up in a spoonful of Indiana soil during screening of 100,000 soil samples from all parts of the world. Only eight months were needed to find, prove and mass-produce it, compared to 12 years for penicillin.

One of its advantages is that it is swallowed, not injected. And it is so free of toxic effects that dosages for children are as big as for adults.

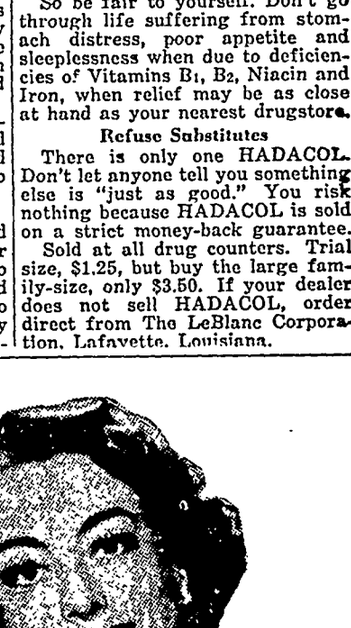
TEMPLE CITY WOMAN FINDS THAT HADACOL CAN BRING REAL RELIEF

HADACOL Helps Folks Suffering Stomach Distress, Poor Appetite and Sleeplessness Caused by An Upset Stomach, If Due to Deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron in System

Mrs. William P. Lauer, 10203 E. Nadine, Temple City, California, is feeling good these days and you can bet your life that she intends to keep on feeling that way. For Mrs. Lauer had been bothered for a time with stomach distress, poor appetite and sleeplessness due to an upset stomach which can be caused by lack of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron, in the system. Mrs. Lauer began taking HADACOL, which supplies these important elements, and soon was feeling fine and says she is going to keep right on taking HADACOL. Here is what she writes:

"I am using my third bottle of HADACOL and I can't recommend it highly enough. I suffered with stomach distress, indigestion, gas and I could hardly eat anything. Now, I can eat almost everything. I'm able to sleep better and just feel better all around. I shall continue to use HADACOL and I recommend it."



Mrs. William P. Lauer

Is it any wonder that Mrs. Lauer is so enthusiastic about today's great HADACOL?

HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of stomach distress, poor appetite and sleeplessness due to an upset stomach, when due to lack of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron in the system.

AND LISTEN TO THIS! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps keep such distress from returning when caused by such deficiencies. Now that's the kind of product folks have been looking for . . . the kind to buy and start taking at once.

HADACOL'S wonderful Vitamins and Minerals come in liquid form and are quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work at once.

HADACOL Is So Effective

Because HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ and to every part of your body. You may have tried other Vitamin preparations or other Vitamin and Mineral preparations, so we make you this offer. Try a bottle of HADACOL today if you need Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron. You be the judge. If you do not believe that HADACOL is the best Vitamin and Mineral preparation you have ever taken, we will gladly send you back your money. That's our positive money-back guarantee. You take no chances.

So be fair to yourself. Don't go through life suffering from stomach distress, poor appetite and sleeplessness when due to deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron, when relief may be as close at hand as your nearest drugstore.

Refuse Substitutes

There is only one HADACOL. Don't let anyone tell you something else is "just as good." You risk nothing because HADACOL is sold on a strict money-back guarantee.

Sold at all drug counters. Trial size, $1.25, but buy the large family-size, only $3.50. If your dealer does not sell HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana.

STRAIGHT COMBINE OATS TO SAVE TIME, WORK

Straight combine oats whereever possible. That's the suggestion of Jay Porterfield, agricultural engineer at Iowa State College.

A big reason for straight combining is that it saves one operation during harvest.

But under some conditions it's best to windrow first. If grain ripens unevenly or if green weeds are about the same height as the grain, then it pays to windrow first.

A binder serves well for windrowing, Porterfield says. Try to keep the windrowed oats straw on top of the stubble and at the same time cut as little of the straw as possible, he suggests.

There are two reasons why Harold Stromer, Hancock County Iowa, is proud of his new barn First, it was built by 72-year-old Herman Schuidt, who built a barn for Stromer's dad 50 years ago And Harold is pretty sure the wind will never unroof the 34x48 building with its hip roof stretching 30 feet above the ground. Cement-floored barn gives Stromer much-needed room. This fine new barn is on Highway 69 just north of Klemme.

Paul Henderson, County Extension Director, received a communication from Harold Gunderson, Iowa State Coloege Extension Entomologist, that some hogs have been killed by the miss-use of Warfarin Rat Poison. Mr Gunderson states that Warfarin must never be mixed in a feed mixer that is also being used to mix feeds for livestock.

Make a permanent bait station if you are going to use this very good rat poison Keep the poison away from hogs and never under any condition mix Warfarin bait in a feed mixer.

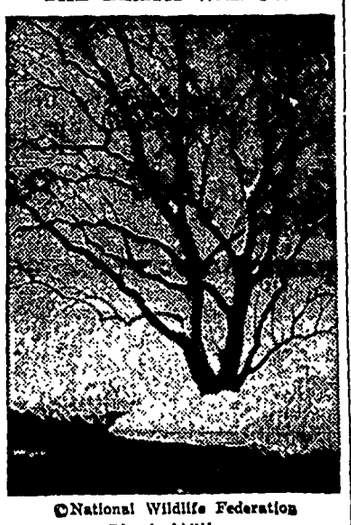
THE BLACK WILLOW



©National Wildlife Federation

Black Willow

The Black Willow, like other members of the willow family, is not a strong, sturdy tree. No one would think of felling and trimming it into planks and beams. It just isn't straight and stout enough to give us fine lumber.

It is an attractive tree, though, and helpful, too. The job it does best is to hold soil together. Where Black Willows sink their roots, it is harder for spattering rain and flowing water to wash away valuable dirt.

Even the wood of the Black Willow is useful at times. Although it isn't what builders want, it is good for making excelsior, boxes, crates, baskets, and wicker furniture.

The chances are that you have seen this tree, because it grows in so many parts of the United States. The National Wildlife Federation reports that Black Willows are common over most of the eastern half of the country. There aren't so many of them farther west, but they do grow in spots all the way to California.

The most likely place to find them is along streams and in other wet places where there is plenty of light. They thrive from sea level to altitudes of 2,000 feet or more.

Where it has enough moisture and sunshine, the Black Willow reaches full growth at fifty to seventy years of age. By that time, it may stand a hundred or more feet in height.

Except in winter, when its leaves are gone, the tree is thick and green with long, slender twigs. Filling the twigs are the narrow green leaves which are the trademark of a willow tree.

The Black Willow's leaves measures from three to five inches in length, and taper down to a fine point. They are a fine point. They are a shining yellow-green on both sides - a bit darker on the top than on the bottom.

In the spring, clusters of tiny flowers grow among the leaves. The flowers hang in tassels which are from one to four inches long. When the tassels ripen, they shed cottony seeds.

Wind and water carry the seeds far and wide. They soon begin to sprout tiny fibers which take hold of the soil and hang on. Some of the seeds win the battle for survival and slowly grow into trees.

But this isn't the only way that Black Willows get a start. According to the National Wildlife Federation, twigs often drop from the big trees and lodge along the banks of streams. Sticking in the mud, the end of a twig takes root and begins to grow. It, too, may become a full-size Black Willow.

Interesting information on other wildlife species can be obtained by writing to the National Wildlife Federation, Washington 10, D. C.

SOME HAND WEEDING WILL PAY IN SOYBEANS

Hand weeding and eliminating of voluntary corn in your soybean fields will pay big dividends when you market young beans. According to Paul Henderson, county extension director. Henderson noticed at least 2 farmers Friday, July 27th following this recommended practice. One family of six between Kanawha and Britt on Highway No. 111 and Henry Schleusner living on highway 18 were observed pulling and cutting weeds out of soybeans.

THE RURAL SCHOOL

Holcomb's Consolidated School A Model for Rural Communities

Adequate educational opportunity is a major desire of all American parents for their children The American system of public schools was designed because of that desire, and, it remains a dominant factor in the continued maintenance and improvement of the system.

Because of sparse population that often entails special difficulties in providing financing, of housing teachers and transportation of pupils, the rural school system has been the slowest to develop.

A model of what the rural community can do to meet its problems is the Holcomb community in Finney county in southwestern Kansas. For 30 years the community has been building an exceptional rural consolidated school.

The village of Holcomb is situated eight miles west of Garden City, the county seat. It has a population of 200 Transcontinental highway 50 and the main line of the Santa Fe railroad pass through it The consolidated school is the dominant institution. There are an alfalfa-dehydration plant, a post office, and two filling stations, one of which carries a small stock of groceries There is no church, no bank, no general store. For the services of these institutions, the people go to Garden City.

On January 6, 1920, three districts voted for consolidation of a school at Holcomb. On July 23, 1921, another district petitioned to be admitted to the union district. At various times since 1921 additional districts have joined, the latest additions occurred in 1946. These additions brought to nine the total number of districts to come in and brought the area of the consolidated district to 210 square miles.

During the past 30 years the Holcomb school has developed a full curriculum, including instruction in the elementary grades, from the kindergarten up, and in the high school full courses on every subject, including vocational agriculture and vocational homemaking.

By 1950 the school owned 12 buildings and 20 acres of land. The buildings included the main school structure, a grade school, a vocational agriculture building, a teacherage, a bus garage, and seven teachers' cottages.

THE VISITOR to the Holcomb community soon senses an attitude of community pride in the school and a marked popular solicitude for the school's welfare. The solicitude extends not only to athletics and other extracurricular activities but also to courses offered and to the maintenance of good academic standards. The visitor gains the impression that the community, for all its enthusiasm for athletics, would feel much less disturbed by a "disastrous" basketball season than by a reduction of the school's rating by the state department of education from Class A to Class B. The public created the school and the public has stood behind it.

The Holcomb community was one of the first in the state to place a program of rural school consolidation into effect and it has proven to be an experiment of note to the entire country. In the school's 30 years, there have been 715 graduates of the eighth grade and 361 graduates of the high school.

Faced thirty years ago with conditions that might well discourage a rural community regarding school facilities for its children, the people of the Holcomb district, through the exercise of courage, ingenuity, enterprise, and group loyalty, have met their situation successfully and in a way that may well be an example to many other rural communities.

RICHARD BENEDICT hung around the old Paramount studios in Astoria, N.Y., when he was a child and lived nearby—never dreaming that one day he would have the best role of his motion picture career in that same studio's "Ace in the Hole" In the meantime he was a promising young welterweight fighter, went on the stage, went to war, returned to the stage and then into pictures. In "Ace in the Hole" his work was cut out for him; Kirk Douglas and Jan Sterling head an excellent cast. And Benedict's role is so important that he simply had to be good in it. He's more than good—he's excellent.

Clifton Webb seems slated to go on playing fathers forever and ever. The papa of twelve in "Cheaper by the Dozen" is set for 20th Century-Fox's "Elopement", a comedy about the two families of an eloping couple.

Red Skelton, son of a circus clown, practically grew up under the big tents. Now M-G-M is looking for a good story based on a clown's life for him. Red is tired of just making faces and wants a chance really to act. Reports are that his two recent pictures, "Texas Carnival" and "Lovely to Look At," have given him the sort of parts he wants to do.

Katherine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy made such a wonderful team in "Adam's Rib" that M-G-M obviously had to find another film for them. The new one is "Pat and Mike", a romantic comedy with the two cast as rival managers of soft ball teams. It is an original written by Garson Kanin and Ruth Gordon, two experts who could make even the alphabet sound amusing.

Eight of Hollywood's prettiest girls have been signed by RKO Radio for featured spots as drive-in car hops in "A Girl in Every Port", starring Groucho Marx, Marie Wilson and William Bendix It's a nautical comedy.

THE FICTION CORNER

NO APOLOGIES

By Georgia C. Nicholas

"YOU'RE LATE, Neil Horner!" Taffy handed Neil her jacket to hold for her.

"I know it," Neil said, "And what's more I forgot to bring back that book that my mother borrowed from your mother."

3-Minute Fiction

"And you're not even sorry?" Taffy prodded.

Neil opened the door for her "I'm only ten minutes late and your mother said she was in no hurry for the book."

Taffy didn't answer until they were in the car and on their way to the Horner residence for dinner. "Just how late do you have to be to say you're sorry?"

"What good would it do to say I'm sorry?"

Taffy didn't answer. She didn't want to start a quarrel now. She didn't know Neil's parents very well and she did hope they'd like her. Taffy's mother and Neil's mother belonged to the same club and that's how they became acquainted.

"When are you going to say you'll marry me?" Neil asked as if he didn't know Taffy was peeved.

"I'm not. You haven't any manners."

"I haven't had any complaints before. Don't I always open doors for you and all the other things a guy is supposed to do?

"Oh, yes, the manners that can be seen. But just between us two sometimes I think you're downright rude. You never apologize."

"When are you going to say you'll marry me?"

"See why I never apologize," he whispered.

"I won't say it till you say you're sorry you were late and that you forgot the book."

This time Neil was the quiet one The situation was still unsettled when he turned onto a winding driveway. "Oh, Neil, do you think they'll like me?" Taffy asked.

"Does it matter?"

TAFFY had no chance to answer that one. A maid opened the door for them. She showed Taffy to a bedroom and while Taffy was taking off her jacket Mrs. Horner entered.

"I'm so sorry I wasn't at the front door," Mrs. Horner mourned. "I was all upset this afternoon because the butcher didn't send the kind of meat I ordered. I'm afraid it isn't going to be a very good dinner."

Taffy did her best to assure Mrs. Horner that she was quite comfortable without her jacket. It seemed that the oil burner was out of kilter.

"I don't know how I look in this dress," Mrs. Horner said. "It's one I made myself and I just finished it this afternoon."

Taffy laughed her polite little laugh and they went downstairs. Mr. Horner was a much more comfortable person to meet. He tried to make conversation at the dinner table and cancel his wife's deprecation of everything. After dinner he said, "Mother, I think our guest might like to see some of your paintings."

"Yes," Neil said, "Mother's giving Grandma Moses a run for her money."

Mr. Horner led the way into the living room. Mrs. Horner said, "Oh, they really aren't worth looking at."

"Then let's not look at them."

Had Taffy said that? Taffy had. She realized it on the word 'look' and that was too late. She put her hand over her mouth and faced Neil. His mouth was open as if he'd started to say something, changed his mind and forgotten to shut it. But there was a sparkle in his eyes, the same sparkle she had loved for a long time.

She wasn't quite clear about who said what during the next minute. But somehow Mr. Horner led Mrs. Horner out of the room and people said goodnight. She still stood there looking helplessly at Neil.

He held out his arms. "See why I never apologize?" he whispered.

"Yes, I see. I still think you carry it to extremes, but if I can ever be forgiven for what I just said I'd like to marry you sometime."

"Forgiven? That was just what my mother needed. Now let's take this book back to your mother and tell her we're engaged."

California Highways Followed by Spanish Padres

By Wright A. Patterson

THE VISITOR to Boston wonders at and comments on the narrow, winding, crooked streets of the business section of the city. The natives, to whom he comments, tell him those streets were the cowpaths blazed by the cattle of the early pioneers, and the people of Boston cherish them for that reason.

Far to the west, on the shores of the Pacific, from San Diego north to the Oregon border, from the beaches of the ocean eastward through the high Sierras, the San Bernardino and others of the several mountain ranges, stretch the magnificent California highways. They were not blazed by wandering cattle, but by a devoted band of Spanish padres in their efforts to carry civilization and Christianity to the Indians.

To those weary, disheartened, Spanish, and their following of native Indians, they were traversing El Camino Real. Today the tourist follows the same route when his car glides over the concrete marked as Highway 101. That was the first of many trails that were blazed. Along it, starting at San Diego, and north to Monterey, the padres, led by Father Junipero Serra, built missions, from which to lead the Indian natives from the ways of barbarism to civilization and a Christian life. The tourist of today as he travels over Highway 101, passes these missions.

Some of them are now but picturesque ruins, others are still being used as religious centers. In these, the tourist may attend mass if he so desires, and enjoy something of the atmosphere of those trail blazing days, of approximately 100 years ago.

For the continuing historic and scenic panorama as blazed by the Spanish padres, the people of California cherish their highways, as the people of Boston cherish their crooked streets, because they were once the cowpaths of pioneers. Expert engineering, and vast expenditures have transformed the hazardous mountain passes traversed by the padres into safe highways over and through the mountain ranges, across the sands of the Colorado desert. Should you visit California, whether you travel by train, north or south, by bus or by private car, either of the Rolls-Royce type or the family jalopy, you will follow the trails blazed by the Franciscan padres.

Where their missions were established now are located a number of the state's cities. Los Angeles began as San Gabriel mission. It was the padres who discovered San Francisco bay, and there they established a town that is today the city of San Francisco. The city of San Diego started as a mission. As the tourist travels up and down the state, and across its mountain ranges and deserts, he is following the El Cameno Real as it was blazed by the padres. On those trails are to be found intensely interesting history, an abundance of adventure and romance, and beautiful scenic effects.

Those devout Franciscans did not realize that they were laying out a great highway system to serve an alien people. Their interest, other than that of civilizing the Indians, was to establish a new colony for their king, that of Spain, and to provide routes of travel to and from that colony as they trudged the weary miles of ocean beaches or desert sands. through the dense chaparral and the difficult stony passes of the mountain ranges. They did not realize they were serving as the highway engineers of a state in the American republic, but they were.

To the trails blazed by the padres were added those of the fur traders, those of the gold seekers, those of the stage coaches and the emigrant wagons, many of them following those of the padres. Today all of these constitute the thousands of miles of hard surfaced highways, or the rails of the railroads that make California and its many places of historic and scenic interest so easily accessible to the travelers using such transportation as best suits their wishes. The El Camino Real of 100 years ago is Highway 101 of today.

Allied Officials Again Expressing Belief Talks On 'Smooth' Footing

HOPEFUL SPECULATION—As the UN and Red Korean negotiators resumed efforts for a cease-fire agenda at Kaesong (without the "protection" of the armed Communist guards), Allied officials expressed the belief that the problem of getting something on the agenda would be quickly solved There were hints that the talks were going smoother after the lay-off and the situation was more relaxed.

The man on the American streets, however, was not too full of optimism Those who had followed the criss-cross, tic-tat-toe pattern of the war and the inevitable breakdown of the initial conferences knew that there was no available sounding board to gauge the pattern of events in Korea.

Most Main Street citizens approved the action of Admiral C. Turner Joy, senior UN delegate, in refusing to continue the negotiations until certain Allied rights were recognized. The spark of aggressiveness offered hope that, years hence, we might ask one another who won the war in Korea

LET'S CHECK THE RECORD—Administration forces and Truman backers on Capitol Hill started off the week with an eye to the 1952 elections and a beckoning gesture to the voting public on Main street.

Realizing the pressure from Republicans and anti-administration forces, the parties-in-power felt it wiser to get everything possible in the way of economic control bills in order to prepare some manner of checklist for the voting public

The Administration decided to move quickly for final action on the new defense-production measure, in whatever form it could be shuttled through to replace the original law which expired June 30; is currently in force only through Congressional resolution. The law carries powers for wage and price control, materials allocation, and other measures. Party leaders only hoped they would not have to compromise too much and too often to get the results.

REASONABLE CEILINGS—The long-awaited Washington explosion came in the House as the battle over federal authority to roll back prices opened with loud fanfare. The Administration's willingness to compromise went for naught as farm-area congressmen balked like the proverbial mule.

Before the debate got under way, minority leader Martin and Republican Wolcott (Mich.) leveled charges that the Administration hoped to load the pending control bill with pet "socialistic schemes . . . to sneak in the thoroughly discredited Brannan farm plan through a system of so-called production subsidies."

Administration forces sought the compromise by offering an amendment to retain the present 10 per cent rollback on live beef prices, but forego other farm rollbacks. Farm bloc speaker Cooley (D., N.C.) however, suggested a ban on all farm-price rollbacks—including the one already made on beef. Cox (D., Ga.) went further—seeking to bar all price rollbacks; on industrial goods as well as farm products.

The hopes of the Administration thus lay in finding a way to woo the farm-area congressmen and also take advantage of the House Republican leaders' promise to help pass a law that will keep prices "within reason."

UNPROVEN ANGEL—In New York a federal judge gave evidence that life is becoming tough for Communist leaders in the U.S.; for the second time in a week, the Civil Rights Congress was outlawed as a bondsman in federal court.

The dozen-and-two were already out on bond made by CRC, the Red's angel, but Judge Ryan held the Congress had failed to show clear title to bonds; ordered them to find another angel or come back to jail.

MANDATORY SENTENCES—In Washington the House came through with overdue attention to the narcotics problem, voicing approval of a bill requiring mandatory jail sentences for narcotics-law violators.

The measure, Senate-bound, provides for one to five year sentences for first offenders; five to ten years for second offenders; and a 10 to 30 year term for three-time losers. The law would apply to both peddlers and addicts; should be a strong weapon to fight one of the nation's grave problems. Across the country parents, after watching with growing horror the dope probes and hearings, expressed the hope that here was a strong axe to keep the narcotic wolf from the family threshold.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE—The United States lashed back at Hungary for the expulsion of two American envoys from Budapest two weeks ago; ordered that nation to call home two top diplomats, Peter Varkonyi, legation attachee and Lajos Nagy, charge d' affaires. Varkonyi was to leave "immediately," Nagy as soon as new minister Emil Weil could present his credentials.

The move was retaliation for the expulsion of American envoys and other pressure that had caused cessation of U.S. information and educational activities in Hungary. It marked, however, a new low in diplomatic relations between the two countries—relations that had seemed improved recently by the release of American businessman Robert A. Vogler.

AND THE RAINS CAME—As the week began, the most costly flood in the history of the nation moved East from Kansas City along the Missouri river, leaving the gateway to the Southwest strangled with slowly receding waters.

Residents along a 400 mile waterway counted the damages. 75,000 or more had been left homeless, 400,000 more otherwise affected. Losses were estimated close to the billion dollar mark, nearly twice as much as that in the 1937 Ohio and Mississippi rivers floods.

NO SIGNIFICANCE—Navy spokesmen in Washington declared there was "no special significance" in Admiral Forrest Sherman's conferences with Franco in Spain, although sources reported that the U.S. officer sought the use of navy bases in Spain for the U.S. Sixth Mediterranean Fleet.

Britain and France, opposing admission of Spain into the 12-nation Atlantic Pact, came into the open against the U.S.-Franco ties, said only the Communists stood to gain anything. Uncle Sam, however, seemed to be envisioning a limited role for Spain in the future Western defense efforts Supply and demand: Franco needs arms and ammunition, America wants naval and air bases.

SETTING THE GOAL

U.S. Spurs Record Grain Output

WASHINGTON—The Agriculture department set out to spur the nation's farmers to a new record output of wheat and other fall-seeded grains with the release of production goals.

Secretary Charles Brannan set the 1952 goal for both winter and spring wheat at 78,850,000 acres. With normal yields, crop increase would be 100 million bushels.

The increase would not only meet all expected requirements for the marketing year—both domestic and export, but would also provide for some increase in holdover reserve stocks for that fiscal year ending June 30, 1953. As Secretary Brannan pointed out, "The goals for other fall-seeded grains recognize the need to build up feed grain supplies to aid livestock production.

NATIONAL GUARDSMEN FIGHT RIOTERS . . . Five hundred national guardsmen, their clips loaded and bayonets fixed, took on a mob of 8,000 civilians recently at an apartment building in Cicero, Ill., into which a negro war veteran had sought to move his family. Bricks, bottles and magnesium flares flew through the air. Although no shots were fired, 18 persons were injured and required medical care. Christian's Spending

ONCE upon a time, so they say, a Schotchman opened his pocketbook in December, and a June-bug flew out. That story belongs to the class of stories that sound funny because they are impossible, like the Paul Bunyan stories, or the one about the fly that fell off a marble and broke his back. No man is so stingy that he could go from June to December without opening his pocketbook to spend a single cent. Spending is something all of us do, all the time.

Is Your Money Yours?

"IT'S my money and I can do what I please with it." That is the average man's attitude toward his money. But it's not the Christian attitude.

In the first place, Jesus' parable of the talents reminds us that all the conditions, and all the energy, and everything else that makes earning money possible, are in the long run the gifts of God. "It is he that hath made us and not we ourselves" is just as true now as it ever was.

God it is who gave us life in the first place, who has preserved us, and endowed us with whatever gifts and capacities we have. We are not our own, we are bought with a price, as Paul puts it.

However we earn our living, whether as farmers, business or professional people, if it had not been for the blessings of God we could have earned nothing at all. One bedrock principle of the Old Testament is that the earth is the Lord's. Put that together with the New Testament principle that the Christian belongs to God, and you have arrived at the great principle of "stewardship."

Profits or Profit?

THE earliest Christians of Jerusalem pooled all their resources and dealt them out to all, in proportion to their individual needs. This experiment in sharing the wealth failed, and one main reason for the failure was that they paid all their attention to consumption and none at all to production.

No matter how smoothely you distribute the wealth, if some one is not producing, the whole pile will vanish in time.

Nevertheless, those earliest Christians did have a firm grasp of a real truth: namely, that when a Christian spends money he ought to have the needs of the community first in mind, and not his own profits. Does this sound too idealistic?

Well, even the law, slanted though it may seem toward the protection of wealth, puts limits on the ways a man can spend his money. If it can be shown that what he pays his good money for is hurtful to the community the law will clamp down on him in many cases. You can't keep a skunk farm on Broadway. It may be your money, and your skunks, but it's not your Broadway.

To take another angle: down in Atlanta (Georgia) a highly successful industrialist, when he died, left the stock in his company to his employees. They had helped him earn his fortune, he said, they should share in the proceeds.

Does not our community help us earn whatever we do earn? And doesn't the community deserve consideration in the spending?

The Money-God

NO temples on our main streets are labeled "To the God Mammon." But money is often a god, all the same. On Mammon's alter how many things and men are sacrificed! What will men not do to "make a fast buck," to turn a neat profit? Honor, decency, truthfulness, health, even life itself, will be given up before consenting to cut the profits down.

Every great intrenched evil—gambling, prostitution, corrupt courts, liquor traffic—is as hard to dislodge as the silversmiths of Ephesus, and for the same reason: The people who stand to make money out of sin never care what happens to the sinners.

But let us watch ourselves. Do we smalltimers criticize the paunchy big-shots because we really hate the way they sacrifice everything to greed, or is it because we are envious?

New Faces Liven Boxing Picture

By GRANTLAND RICE

IF there is one thing the fight game or the ring game needed above everything else it was the arrival of new faces. Most of the old faces had begun to pall, leaving a depressing effect. The most popular new face seen around the East was that of Bob Murphy, the Californian carrying the busiest pair of fists we've seen in a long, long spell.

There is another face for the East to look at since Rex Layne lost to Rocky Marciano at the Garden recently. If Layne or Marciano or both, can make good up to the Murphy measurements there will be no complaint. There is still a young fellow named Matthews who can take care of himself, not to mention many others.

Grantland Rice

Ray Robinson has about the only old face that hasn't lost its ring appeal. The answer here is the natural ability, the boxing skill of a great fighter. But most of the old ones have begun to wear out. Replacement orders were badly needed when Murphy arrived and Layne came on from Utah.

We have a faint idea that the face and actions of Murphy are not going to appeal to Doc Kearns manager of Joey Maxim, the light heavyweight champ. Using the same tactics he employed in the Ezzard Charles fight, Maxim might last three rounds. Maybe four. Here is the boxer-slugger combination that makes a good party, as a general rule. Maxim hasn't been too busy in the last two years, but he will spend one of the busiest evenings of his career trying to keep Murphy out of his hair when they get together.

Murphy is the Dempsey type that gives his entire attention to the offensive side. He has little or no interest in defending himself. He is a good puncher, fast enough, and dead game. He also has that other needed ingredient—ability to take a punch on head or body.

The Layne-Marciano event may should give you a better line on where these two belong in the fistic.

Your Favorite Sport?

The sovereign state of Iowa is a pretty fair representative commonwealth as far as average Americanism is concerned. Iowa certainly has as many true Americans, man for man or woman for woman, as any state in the nation.

Such states as Iowa, Texas, Indiana, Tennessee and Ohio are what you might call basic states in regard to American sport. By that I mean such native games as baseball, football, boxing, etc.

Racing has a heavy grip on the states that have racing—New York, Maryland, Kentucky, Illinois, California, Florida, Louisiana, Massachusetts, etc. But racing is missing from many states, twenty-five or thirty, where the scratch sheet and the Racing Form are missing and most of the daily papers give little publicity. Iowa among many others, is one of these. Naturally, racing in such localities is an unimportant item.

A close check on the Iowa situation reveals these facts:

1—The world series is the big sporting feature with a vote of 39 per cent.

2—The Rose Bowl comes second with 17 per cent.

3—The Kentucky Derby is third at 14 per cent.

4—The heavyweight championship comes next at 12 per cent.

5—The Olympic Games are fifth, with the Indianapolis Auto Races, the U.S. Open, and the Chicago All-Star football game following in order.

Here is the way Iowa picked its favorite sports. Baseball, basketball, football, racing, boxing, golf, fishing and hunting.

It must be remembered this is the Iowa angle. There are different angles in other states. You get a different slant when you take in South and North, East and West. For example, Iowa wouldn't be nearly as much steamed up over the same sport that might appeal to Florida and Georgia. Or New York.

There are a few states that take in and nurse after a fashion, every sport. New York, Michigan, California, Illinois, Kentucky, Maryland and Florida lead in this march. They bar neither racing nor boxing.

The Best Dodger Team

Is this .351 mode, the best Dodger team of all time—coming back to May Harlem's Superbas?

There's some doubt about it. With the addition of Andy Pafko, the Brooklyn Brusher, Chuck Dressen's squad stems out as the best team in either league this steamy season.

Their one vulnerable spot is in the box where Erv. Newcombe, Branca, Podbielan, Erskine, King, aren't the best, yet not the worst.

To show the Dodgers' overall make-up, I doubt that a Giant could make this team—with one exception. That one is Maglie, the best Giant pitcher.

Even Ralph Kiner, the Pirate first baseman, couldn't be named over Gil Hodges.

When you get paint on the windowpanes, or when somebody else does and you have to get it off, soak the glass with hot vinegar. Give the vinegar a few minutes to work, and then rub or scrape the paint off. A penny makes a safe, effective scraper. If you use a razor blade or something else that is sharp, be careful around the edges. A careless thrust may jab under the putty and eventually cause it to fall out.

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded businesses and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

An emergency, according to Mr. Webster, is an "unforseen combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action."

Emergency vehicles—fire trucks and ambulances—must answer this call for immediate action by getting to the scene of the mishap as quickly as possible.

That's why Iowa law requires drivers of all motor vehicles to pull over to the right and stop when they hear or see an emergency vehicle approaching

Your Iowa Safety Congress adds: Give emergency vehicles the right of way, someone's life may depend on them

Every time you hear the siren or see the red flashing light of a fire truck or ambulance, pull over and stop! They may be answering an emergency call at YOUR home!

KANAWHA LETS CONTRACT FOR BLACK TOPPING STREETS

The Iowa Road Building Co. of Fairmont, Minnesota has been awarded the contract for the black topping of 16 blocks of streets in Kanawha. The work will be started soon.

At Dows the streets are being re-surfaced by the McEnroe Asphalt Co. of Algona, using the "armor coat" processing which gives the streets a coat of oil and gravel similar to what was used at Dows a few years ago to make the streets dust free.

Residents of Klemme are still breathing dust on side streets The survey for a black topping program was made a couple of years ago. Maybe it would be a good time to look into the proposition of a black topping program again.

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

The father stayed in the kitchen most of that first night that the body of his 17-year old son lay in the front room. He came out only once, walking slowly, as though wadding through a heavy dream, and stood by the coffin.

He reached down and touched his son's shoulder lightly "Such a fine, big boy, "he said "And I've got to put him away."

Later, he was able to talk to an old friend. He tried, searchingly, to explain what had happened and why.

"People thought it was funny, but that's why he drove the new car around town while I stayed with the old bus. It gave me a wonderful kick just to have him pick me up at work in his own car.

"Of course, the car wasn't the reason for what happened. You can't blame machines for what you fail to do yourself. I knew the boy was a reckless driver. Friends told me. The police chief talked to me about it.

"So, I bawled the boy out a couple of times. But there's no use being dishonest now. I was proud of everything he did Secretly, I was even proud of his well, . 'spectacular driving,' as he called it. I just couldn't imagine anything like this happening to a boy that fine, a boy that fine, a boy that young.

"I haven't been able to think much since they called me to the hospital in the middle of the night. All I can do is remember. I'll never forget that instead of trying to teach him or guide him, I gave him things, gave him more than he understood how to use I don't know how I can live with that and without him"

DOMESTIC PROBLEMS

Human Relations Center Set Up At University of Pennsylvania

A human relations center, the first of its kind ever organized in this country to provide a complete service to communities faced with racial and religious conflicts, has been established at the University of Pennsylvania.

The new development in meeting "the outstanding problem in democratic life" is known as the Albert M. Greenfield Center for Human Relations, it was announced by Harold E. Stassen, president of the university and Dr Everett R Clinchy, president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews

It will start its work in September. Its program was made possible, through the combined financing of the Philadelphia area office of the National Conference, the University of Pennsylvania, and Albert M. Greenfield, a Philadelphia realtor and civic leader

The governing body of the center is an executive committee consisting of two representatives each from the university, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, and the community Dr. Martin W Chworowsky, of Columbia University, has been named director.

Harold E. Stassen, (above), president of the University of Pennsylvania, together with Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews announced recently the establishment of the Albert M. Greenfield Center for Human Relations at the university.

"The urgent need to improve the quality of human relations in our country has been stressed as the outstanding problem in our democratic life," declared the members of the executive committee in a statement outlining objectives "A university dedicated to the advancement of knowledge and to the education of people to render more effective service as citizens and as members of their respective professions has a special responsibility to bring its resources to bear in solving human relations problems.

"Because of an increasingly widespread recognition of the underlying need and of the role which institutions of higher learning can assume" the statement added, the resources of the university and the community are brought together in a center for human relations where many of the problems in intergroup relations can be attacked."

THE WORK OF THE new center can be compared to our modern health centers, Dr. Clinchy said. "They will provide communities with scientific resources for treating tensions and conflicts in the same way that a modern medical center guards the public health."

He explained that the center would conduct research activities, train students in intergroup problems, serve the community in meeting situations growing out of group conflict, and test existing methods for meeting these problems.

"While the centers would be equipped to study the causes and treatment of chronic social disease like prejudice, discrimination and racism," Dr. Clinchy said, "basically they would be concerned with preventive measures for correcting and eliminating conditions that lead to hostilities in social relations"

Members of the executive committee representing the National Conference are Mr. Greenfield and Dr. Tanner G. Luckrey, assistant to the Board of Superintendents of the Board of Education of Philadelphia.

THE FICTION CORNER

BRIGHT IDEA

By Richard H. Wilkinson

MR. and Mrs. Roscoe Hardy found themselves in a sad predicament. For years they had solved the problem of summer vacations by visiting friends and relatives They had made a career of it. They were professional guests. But now the end had come. The Hardy's were no longer welcome where once they had enjoyed economical weeks of rest.

3-Minute Fiction

The future looked black. The Hardy's bank account was never lower Then Roscoe had an idea. He remembered that once upon a time he had an Uncle Ralph. Rumors drifted in, unfounded, that Uncle Ralph had gone to Alberta, Canada, established himself in the wheat business and prospered.

Now then, thought Roscoe, why not restore Uncle Ralph to the good graces of the family circle? Why not cook up a story about Uncle Ralph suddenly dying and making Roscoe and Mrs Roscoe sole heirs to his millions? Why not mention this in a letter to Cousin Beatrice and Chauncey Hardy, who lived in Philadelphia and who had practically evicted them two years ago? And if it worked on Beatrice and Chauncey, why not try it on other relatives?

Mrs. Roscoe Hardy had always been rather grudging about handing out compliments to her husband. But she had to admit that this plan was deserving of a lot of credit. She even agreed to write the letter to Beatrice herself.

"——and as you probably know," Mrs. Roscoe wrote, "dear Uncle Ralph, who has been living in Alberta these past 20 years, passed away a month ago and has made us sole heirs to his millions. Naturally we are upset at the news of his death, and would like to come to Philadelphia for a week or two to rest up and visit you."

Roscoe gulped. "It's—it's that relative that's visiting them."

Less than three days elapsed before Mrs Roscoe had a reply.

"Darling Grace," Beatrice wrote, "news of dear Uncle Ralph's death has upset us terribly. Of course you need a rest. And both Chauncey and I will be delighted to have you as our guests for as long as you want to stay, despite the fact that at present we have other relatives visiting us. Chauncey and I can sleep in the day bed in the living room."

"Humph!" Mrs. Roscoe folded the letter with a look of triumph.

IT WAS a long drive to Philadelphia, and Roscoe had been able to borrow barely enough to get them there. But the future now loomed bright. There would be a pleasant month of relaxation, free from worry about the cost of meals, and always there was the possibility of being able to touch Chauncey for a hundred or two. And after that, more relatives, more pleasant times, and more touches. Roscoe figured they could work their present scheme for at least a year in safety, while the "estate" was being settled.

The Roscoe Hardys arrived in Philadelphia late one rainy night and drove up to Cousin Chauncey's with glad expectancy. The place was brightly lighted.

Roscoe honked his horn shrilly and had the satisfaction of seeing Cousin Chauncey jump to his feet and rush to the door.

"I'll go up and get Chauncey to come out for our luggage," Roscoe told his wife."

Roscoe climbed out of the car and ran through the pelting rain to the house. He disappeared inside, while Mrs. Roscoe waited. She waited perhaps three minutes and then became irritable. What was the idea? she asked herself. What kind of a reception was this for the heirs of millions?

The front door suddenly burst open and Roscoe came hurtling down the walk.

Breathing heavily, Roscoe climbed into the car. There was a wild look in his eyes.

"For heaven's sake, what's happened?" Mrs. Roscoe demanded. "What's the matter?"

Roscoe gulped. "It's—it's that—relative that's visiting them."

"Relative? Who—oh, the one Beatrice spoke about in her letter. Well, what about it? Who is it, anyway?"

Roscoe gasped again, this time not entirely from lack of breath. "It's Uncle Ralph!" he blurted.

MIRROR Of Your MIND

Golddiggers Found Incapable of Love

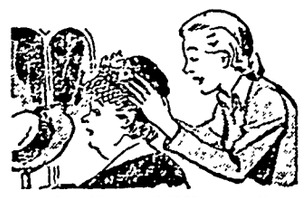
By Lawrence Gould

Are golddiggers really mercenary?

Answer: Not at bottom, maintains Dr. Edmund Bergler. The golddigger is essentially a girl who is incapable of loving anybody. But two things reveal the fact that money is not what she is really after. her propensity for marrying someone who is not as rich as she imagines and her discontent with anything she gets after she has got it. Her real, if unconscious, aim in life is to perpetuate her sense of being refused and rejected, and this is why, when any demand of hers is granted, she immediately makes another, more exacting one.

Are most people conscious of their age?

Answer: Not in any realistic sense, says Dr. G. Kafka in Acta Psychologica. The average person gets a fixed idea of his own age at about 25 and thinks of his friends as of the same age, usually judging new acquaintances to be older than they are. Up to around 40, he feels at home with 25-year-olds, but sees middle age approaching for his contemporaries. At 50 he still feels younger than he is, but cannot understand the way the younger generation appears to have grown up, and does not know how to treat them. As another writer put it: "No one ever feels middle-aged—you feel young until you begin to feel old."



Should a childless wife "work?"

Answer: Certainly—at one thing or another. There is nothing psychologically worse for any woman than to have nothing to do which she feels is worth doing, and few women can spend all their energies in keeping house for themselves and their husbands. The idea that a man's selfrespect will suffer if his wife goes out and works for money is a relic of the past, and usually implies fear of her becoming "independent." But even where this idea persists, a childless wife can find an unpaid job, working for some phase of social welfare.

KEEPING HEALTHY

Keep Ill Child Quiet in Polio Time

By Dr. James W. Barton

There have been so many epidemics of infantile paralysis that physicians are learning to recognize cases earlier and so prevent much of the paralysis that accompanies this disease.

In Annals of Internal Medicine, Dr. John R. Paul (Yale University) points out that the average series of infantile paralysis (poliomyelitis) in succeeding epidemics, contains a decreasing percentage of persons over age 15. There is no explanation for this fact but it is found that the percentage of cases which do not result in permanent paralysis is apparently increasing. It is because so many older individuals now contract infantile paralysis that most physicians use the name poliomyelitis instead of infantile paralysis.

Symptoms of poliomyelitis found in both early and late cases are fever, vomiting and headache, whether or not the disease progresses to paralysis.

The type of onset in young children seems to differ from that of older children and adults. Pain and a quiet onset are more likely to occur in patients over 15 years of age than in those under that age.

Once there is a rise in temperature, it is believed that the virus or organism of poliomyelitis may already be in the central nervous system and the patient should be handled accordingly. Once the virus reaches the central nervous system, there are areas in which there is numbness or partial anesthesia, pain in the limbs and then follows stiff neck, stiff back and increase or exaggeration in one or more of the reflexes. These symptoms may be late in coming but Dr. Paul points out that careful handling of the patient, keeping him quiet and off his feet, may delay or prevent paralysis.

Where onset is gradual or insidious, exercise or exertion should be avoided. However, in 80 per cent or more of those under the age of 10, the onset is likely to be sudden, whereas it is sudden in only one-half the patients over age 15.

GRASSROOTS

There Is Hope '52 Election Will Oust Wastrels

By Wright A. Patterson

DESPITE all the needs for economy, consistently urged by the President, the executive department at Washington does not practice any of the President's admonitions that he insists are necessary on the part of every American.

In government the waste goes merrily on, with Gen. George Marshall's department of defense leading the way. As an example: Recently the army wanted several million pounds of margarine for the troops in Korea. The purchasing agent of the army purchased the several million pounds at a price of 25 cents a pound. Within a few minutes walk of the Pentagon building, Secretary Brannan, secretary of agriculture, sold at approximately the same time, just about the same number of pounds of grade A-1 creamery butter to Italy at 15 cents a pound. That butter had been purchased by the department to keep the price of butter up to the American consumer.

Had it been provided for our armed forces, the result on the home market would have been the same as selling it to Italy. Such transactions represent unnecessary waste.

Hundreds of such items have been dug out of the records by members of congress, and are aired on the floors of both the senate and house. It is the airing of such items that causes the careful scrutiny of appropriation bills.

Last year the navy purchased paint enough to paint all naval ships several times over. The surplus, and more, was sold to a German concern. When it was found that too much had been sold, at a price of less than one third the original purchase price, navy purchasing agents bought that same paint back from the German concern at better than three times the price at which it had been sold. Waste! Waste! Waste! through all the administrative departments of government, and no one called on the carpet because of it.

The total runs into many millions and possibly billions, for all of which the tax payers must pay.

Senator George (D) of Georgia says the administrative departments can easily cut six billions from their budget demands, and that there will be no additional taxes voted until that six billion cut has been made. That demanded six billion cut does not include any defense rearmament expenditures, which could cover another six billion.

Despite the evidence of waste the President continues to call for more and larger appropriations, more taxes, that the nation may be saved from the dangers of inflation. He does not recognize that government purchasing of commodities creates a shortage, quite as much as individual demands, only the excess demands of government, is far greater than is the hoarding purchases of the individual. From what school of economists does he select his advisers?

Each one of the hundreds of items of sheer waste that congress is seeing are but a drop in the inflationary rainstorm, but the total of them constitutes a flood.

It takes desire for economies on the part of executive heads from the President down. Those who do not have such a desire, those who are responsible for the waste to be found in the executive departments of government, should be severely disciplined for waste in their departments, but such is not the way of politics, and the rule of today in Washington is "politics as usual", regardless.

The coming national election might contain hopes for improvement, hopes for a radical reduction in the army of inefficient bureaucrats, but the Republicans are making no promises. They are not interested in a reduction in the bureaucratic army, only in effecting a change in the personnel of that vast army of more than 2,300,000. They now represent Democratic votes, when the personnel is changed they will represent Republican votes, but be equally as inefficient.

Gen. Ridgway will not be dismissed for not following Presidential directives, though doing so brings dishonor and defeat to America.

TIME OUT FOR CHOW . . . Vice Admiral Turner C. Joy (left), head of the United Nations delegation at the truce talks in Kaesong, and Major General Henry I. Hodes pass an armed Communist Korean guard on their way for chow during a recess in the truce meetings. Note marked hostility on guard's face. The big point that was holding up negotiations at this time was the question of removal of foreign troops from Korea. The North Koreans and the Peiping radio were asking complete withdrawal of all foreign forces from the war torn land and a dividing between north and south at the 38th parallel and a buffer zone.

TREAT FOR GI'S IN TRUCE CITY . . . Six American GI's, part of the auxiliary personnel inside the armistice city of Kaesong, Korea, for the truce talks between U.N. and Red officials, reach into a box of candy offered by a girl in a North Korean army uni-form, playing host to the United Nations soldiers. The Communists called off the talks for a few days for what U.N. officials believe was a chance to communicate with Peiping and Moscow. Big issue raised between the negotiators at the time this was taken was the Communist demands tha all foreign roops be removed from Korean soil.

TWINS COMMISSIONED . . . Women's medical specialist corps, established in 1947, is the army's youngest corps in operation today.

Lesson for August 19, 1951

AMERICANS are not noted for their respect for law. Sometimes big business is the reason. In a certain southern state there are two countries through which run some main highways. But tourists are well advised to stay away from there, because the roads have been pounded into a mass of pot-holes by overloaded coal trucks operating at high speeds and often on the wrong side of the road. Now the state has laws against overloading trucks; it has laws against speeding. There is an honest state police department. But although various arrests have been made, the head of the police department reports that in those two counties they never yet have been able to secure a single conviction in the courts. Why?

Who Is to Blame?

SOMETIMES politics is to blame. That is to say, a man wants to get, or to hold, office, so eagerly that he will ignore or defy the law in order to keep his little place in the sun.

There is another county where a policeman shot a law-breaker resisting arrest and attempting to shoot the officer. The county judge tried to make three successive grand juries indict the policeman, but after looking into the facts they all refused.

Here was the interesting spectacle of a judge on the bench (elected there) trying to make the law work against itself, trying to force a grand jury to indict an innocent man. The thing was, the policeman was from out of the county, but the man he killed, being a bootlegger, had many friends who were also friends of the judge.

We Get What We Deserve

BUT we can't blame big business, or mean politics, for the lawlessness of America If individuals repected the law, if every man repected the law just as he wants others to respect it, we could handle business and we could get rid of dishonest politicians

An official high in federal circles, who had had plenty of opportunity to observe, remarked last spring, speaking of controls, that every one wants the other man controlled, everybody wants to control somebody else, but nobody wants to be controlled.

That's just the trouble. We can make all the laws we please, but so long as we are the kind of people who will not respect a law if it cramps our own style, then we need not be surprised at the sort of thing a senate crime committee digs up.

No Government Is Perfect

MANY of us try to excuse ourselves by saying that the government is inefficient or even crooked, and that the laws are unfair Christians, certainly, can see very easily the failings of both government and law But Christians ought to be the very persons to set the example of respect for law and government.

Consider the New Testament. Hardly a single Christian mentioned in that book had the least thing to do with making the laws of those times. The government was from the top down, the exact opposite of democratic. None of the early Christians could vote or hold office.

The government, whether in Palestine or in Rome, was in non-Christian hands. The laws lacked a good deal of being wholly just and fair.

Nevertheless, Jesus and Paul and Peter, all of whom suffered from the laws of their times, urged men to pay tribute (taxes) to Caesar, to support the magistrates, to obey the laws. Even a selfish, money-hungry and often cruel government like that of Rome deserved support.

Jesus and Paul alike remind us that we rely on government for protection; that government, in spite of all exceptions, is on the side of good men, not against them.

If we had no government we should miss it and want it. St. Peter writing to Christians who were actually being persecuted by the government, urged them nevertheless to be loyal to the authorities. There may come times—indeed, human nature being what it is, such times are bound to come—when a government proves so corrupt and unjust that it deserves to fall; but even then the way out is not the way of lawlessness. Reforms come best from the law-abiding, not the law-deriding

Turpin-Robinson Bout Tops List

By GRANTLAND RICE

THE fight game has run from famine to overflow, from rags to riches, at the fastest pace anyone can recall.

The startling defeat of Ray Robinson by Randy Turpin has left the September situation badly overjammed.

Jim Norris naturally wants a Robinson-Turpin return match for September with the prospect of a $500,000 show. He also wants to give Joe Louis his shot at the lost title in the same month. He has plans for the younger heavyweights who have been moving forward.

Certainly of all the September parties, the Turpin-Robinson meeting heads the list in the way of general interest Robinson's defeat is old stuff now, but it is still an almost unbelievable episode. The reason for this is plain. British fighting men have been so bad through so many years that one takes British defeat for granted before a glove is thrown.

There are many still who want to see what happened to Robinson since he crossed the purling Atlantic Slump: in fighting form are not uncommon but it is difficult to see how Robinson could have gone back that far.

Grantland Rice

One answer is that Randy Turpin must be a much better fighter than he was rated. Even a slipping Robinson, a skidding Robinson is still something to beat

So everyone, in any way interested in the boxing game, or the career of a champion, wants to know what the true answer is.

What has Turpin in his system that was overlooked? Why has Robinson gone back? Or how far has Robinson gone back?

Ray bestrode his field like a towering Collossus up to the Turpin moment It must have been a rude shock after so many years to find himself outboxed and outpunched by a considerable margin.

There are many reasons why a Turpin-Robinson return will attract the biggest crowd of many years, plus one of the richest harvests. This could be true in England or over here. With the fading days of Joe Louis upon us, Robinson had become the sole survivor of the ring's greater days, when Dempsey, Tunney, Henry Armstrong and a few others were around.

The Long, Long Trail

Joe Louis is now more obsessed than ever that he will be heavyweight champion again before September passes on. He will tell you he had a different feeling in his Savold match, a feeling of deeper confidence, of greater speed, of his ability to hit and hurt.

I have seen champions before who were keen enough to regain their lost titles. Jim Corbett was one, back in the years when he trained so desperately for the Jeffries fight. Corbett astonished Jeffries and the world at large by his amazing condition.

Dempsey lost no time in facing a long, hard training campaign for his second meeting with Tunney. He worked for many hours a day for the better part of a year to be ready for this meeting. The fact is, I think he overdid it. He had a close call in the early part of his Sharkey bout, and might have left the scene that night a badly beaten man. But the keen desire to get another crack at Tunney helped Jack along.

But Louis has a burning, blistering desire, possibly unequalled in ring history, to put the old crown back upon the Louis knob It will also help cover the expanding bald spot.

The Last Big Charge

A year ago Mrs Dodge Sloane's Brookmeade Stable dropped famous Calumet from first place as the top money winner of the year.

It isn't likely that Calumet will lead the financial parade this busy season of 1951. It may be Brookmeade again, or Greentree, or Sonny Whitney, or George Widener. Or some other stable.

But the Jones boys, Ben and Jimmy, plus Mrs. Warren Wright, are giving Calumet one big final whirl, whatever happens later. Their two major performers are Citation and Bewitch.

Last winter at Santa Anita, Ben Jones told me that 1952 would write the big story for Calumet.

"We have seven colts by Bull Lea and six fillies," he said. "We will have little for 1951, outside of my old-timers. But we may have plenty for 1952. We may get another Citation or another Coaltown or another Whirlaway.

The Big Stew

Marciano, Louis, Ezzard Charles and Jersey Joe,
Dip 'em all into the stew, and stir the steaming dough.
Pour the gravy, thick and brown and watch the suckers throb,
Isn't that a pretty dish to set before the mob?
Marciano, Louis, Ezzard Charles and Jersey Joe,
Every one went "thataway," to duck the winning blow.

KIDNEYS MUST REMOVE EXCESS WASTE
When kidney function slows down, many folks complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Don't suffer longer with these discomforts if reduced kidney function is getting you down—due to such common causes as stress and strain, over-exertion or exposure to cold. Minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or wrong diet may cause getting up nights or frequent passages.
Don't neglect your kidneys if these conditions bother you. Try Doan's Pills—a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While often otherwise caused, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief from these discomforts—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

"COW CONFERENCE" IS BEING PLANNED

For Dairymen And Will Be Held In September

Plnas are nearly complete on an all-day "Cow Conference" program for dairymen at Iowa State College September 5th.

This is the first event of its kind ever held at the college. A. R. Porter, in charge of dairy husbandry at the college, said it is hoped that the Cow Conference will become an annual event where new developments and achievements in the dairy husbandry field may be presented to Iowa dairymen.

The program will combine activities of the annual artificial insemination conference, which in the past has been held at the college each fall, and the dairy herd improvement association supervisors' banquet held during Dairy Cattle Congress at Waterloo. While these meetings have dealt only with artificial insemination and DHIA work, the Cow Conference this fall will cover the entire field of dairy husbandry.

Show Extension, Research

An "open-house" program scheduled during the morning at the College Dairy Farm will give visitors an opportunity to find out what the college is doing in research and extension programs. Exhibits and demonstrations are being planned.

Some of the research projects on which progress reports will be made include inbreeding of the College Holstein herd, artificial insemination studies, frass silage investigations, calf feeding experiments and studies of dairy cattle diseases.

The afternoon program to be held in the Memorial Union Building will include illustrated talks by leading men in the dairy production field, recognition of outstanding dairymen, and presentation of awards.

Make DHIA Awards

Among those getting awards will be DHIA members whose herds have made yearly butterfat averages of 400 pounds or more 10 different times including the past testing year. Top DHIA supervisors will receive awards in the Records and Reports Contest, and winners of the Meritorious Sire Awards Contest will be announced.

Porter urges dairymen to make the trip to the Cow Conference a family outing. A special program for the ladies is being planned by Dr. Paulena Nickell, associate dean of the Division of Home Economics. It is suggested that families plan on bringing a picnic lunch to be eaten on the lawn at the dairy farm.

FEED GILTS SEPARATELY FOR BETTER BROOD SOWS

Swine producers who raise their own breeding stock find it pays to "grow" rather than "fatten" gilts they are planning to keep, says E. L. Quaife, extension animal husbandman at Iowa State College.

Separate brood sow prospects from the market herd when they are 3 to 4 months old. By handling them separately a producer can put gilts on a growing ration to develop the stretch and strong bones desired in brood sows.

Gilts that are taken directly from the market herd in the fall may raise good litters, but more often they do not, Quaife says. They often get too fat on full feed, and there is more possibility of fat gilts becoming weak in their pasterns and faulty in their pigs.

Good pasture is an important part of the feeding program Quaife recommends for growing gilts. The grain ration can be made up of two-thirds oats and one-third corn, and the gilts should have access to a mineral mixture. With this ration and good pasture, the need for protein supplement is not high. Quaife points out. One-fourth pound per day should be sufficient.

Arnold Family Returned From Trip Through The West

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Arnold, Wilbur, Evelyn, and Bruce returned home Friday after a three week vacation in the West. Their 8000 mile trip took them into fifteen states where they saw many dams, national parks, forests, and other points of interest in the mountain regions. In Oregon they visited with Mr. and Mrs. Steve Day and family, and in Colorado they called on Mrs. Ethel White, a former Klemme resident.

PAUL SILL BUYS JACK RABBIT MOVIES

Paul Sill has purchased the "Jack Rabbit" outdoor movie truck from Bob and Chuch Legg. The deal was completed Tuesday with Mr. Sill taking the truck to Alexander that evening for his first experience as owner of a portable outdoor theatre.

The present schedule of summer shows runs until Sept. 9. Other towns are Thornton, Fertile, Burt, Goldfield and Klemme. This is the second season for the "Jack Rabbit" in northern Iowa.

Johnson and Legg had a circuit in Texas last winter and Mr. Sill also plans to spend the cold months in the Rio Grande Valley, making money with his portable movie. He will leave for Texas the latter part of October.

Mr. Johnson purchased the "Chief" outdoor theatre at Estherville earlier this summer, and has built up a good business with it.

FEEDER NUMBERS EXPECTED TO RISE

But Cattle Prices Likely To Remain About Same

Buyers of feeder cattle will have more stock to choose from this fall than they had last year and prices are likely to be about the same as a year ago, says Wayne A. Pearce, extension economist at Iowa State College, in summing up the feeder cattle price and supply outlook.

He points out that Jan. 1 beef cow and calf numbers were up to 10 percent, indicating a larger calf crop and more yearlings and long yearlings. And a number of older cattle that would have gone into feedlots this summer are now being carried through on grass as a result of the price roll-back, he adds.

Forecasts Strong Demand

Pearce forecasts a strong consumer demand for beef this fall and winter. He believes this will assure a larg number of cattle on feed and a strong demand for feeder cattle, unless a poor corn crop causes a feed shortage.

Marketings will probably be spread over a longer period than usual this year, Pearce says. With generally excellent pasture conditions in the range country there will be no hurry to move cattle off grass.

Short Turn Feeding

There seems to be a pretty good chance that feeding heavy cattle for a short turn will pay better than feeding operations this fall, according to Pearce. He explains that there should be more cattle of this class available and ranchers will be anxious to move the heavier weights that carry some finish rather than young stock that could be held over.

This class of heavier cattle with some finish may decline as the supply increases later, Pearce points out. Currently they are selling as feeders at about $2 per hundred-weight above the slaughter cattle ceiling. Larger supplies are likely to cause the feeder price to decline to near the slaughter price for these cattle. It's not likely that these conditions will show up in other classes, Pearce says.

Probably Sell At Ceiling

Fed cattle are almost certain to sell at ceiling prices this winter, Pearce says. With the rather wide spread between grades under current price ceilings, a short term feeding operation that will raise cattle one grade looks like it might pay this fall, if the cattle can be bought, he concludes.

TAKE GOOD CARE OF NEW SEEDINGS

It Will Affect Yield Of Next Year's Crop

Iowa farmers can raise next years forage yields by taking care of this year's legume stands in stubble fields.

Ralph Krenzin, extension agronomist at Iowa State College, gives some management guides to promote good summer growth and prepare the stand for winter.

Remove the small grain straw left on the field behind the combine. Sometimes this isn't necessary, especially where the straw was light and the straw spreader did an effective job

Cut Heavy Stubble

In heavy straw stands where a tall, thick stubble was left, it may pay to clip the stubble and remove it, Krenzin says The straw is a good source of bedding for livestock. And in thin stands where there were lots of weeds at harvest time, it's a good practice to mow the weeds and take them off

Straw, heavy stubble or weeds shade the legume plants and mat down into a heavy mulch This mulch holds back the normal growth of the legume, Krenzin points out.

May Graze Some

Vigorous legume stands often make a late summer hay or pasture crop. Taking off surplus growth actually helps the stand, if it's taken early enough for the legume to grow back before winter, Krenzin says He recommends controlled grazing if the crop is pastured Livestock may damage the stand if allowed to graze it to the ground. Where weedy grasses are a problem, clip them during the summer.

Can Harvest Late

Krenzin says the stand should have about a month before the end of the growing season to make its regrowth for winter Usually this means there should be no pasturing or cutting for hay after about the first of Sept

In the regrowth period the legume plants build reserves in the roots and crowns and "harden off" for winter. After the plants have hardened off, one can safely take off some of the top growth if he has a way to use it that will pay for the expense of cutting and removing it.

Killed In Auto Accident

Mr. and Mrs. L. N. Baldner of Dallas Center prepared dinner one recent Sunday for friends from Grundy Center, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hoffa. When the guests did not arrive, the noon meal was delayed. Not until five o'clock did they learn over the radio that Mrs. Hoffa had been killed in an auto accident near Marshalltown, also her young brother. Mr. Hoffa was critically injured.

Both Hurt

A father and son were hurt in an unusual haying accident near North English recently. The father, Melvin Rathjen, became entangled in the hay rope. Son Larry went to his aid and also became entangled. They were carried upward about 40 feet, when the rope broke and they fell to the concrete below. They both received broken bones.

NEWSPRINT MILLS TO RAISE PRICES TO CANADIAN LEVEL

Washington, — A "number" of U. S. newsprint mills will raise their ceiling prices to the new Canadian level of $116 a ton, according to the office of price stabilization.

After meeting with the newsprint advisory committe Wednesday, OPS officials said that some U. S. mills are entitled to raise prices even more, but have "indicated" they will not go beyond the $116 level.

The newsprint committe told OPS that Canadian prices always have determined U. S prices. Canada supplies 85 per cent of the newsprint used by U. S. publishers.

Crown-Zellerbach corporation, San Francisco, one of the largest newsprint makers, already has boosted prices $10 a ton to $116.

LANDSCAPE DRIVEWAY WITH SAFETY IN MIND

Do you have a clear, long view of both sides of the road from your driveway? When you approach your house from either direction, could you spot a car coming out of your drive from a good distance?

If you can't, then it's probably because crops, bushes, trees or other plantings are in the way. If such is the case, both landscape architects and safety specialists would give you a "black mark."

Heavy Landscaping Detracts

A heavily landscaped driveway or front lawn actually detracts from a clean, sweeping view of your house. Margherita Tarr, extension landscape at Iowa State College, tells us that high shrubs belong in the background, not foreground. Plantings close to the house in front, she says, will give a far nicer setting to your home than a high hedge out near the road or drive. If you have privacy in mind, save it for your back yard, where high shrubbery is infinitely more attractive and doesn't constitute a safety hazard.

If you feel you must have some plantings other than grass and shade trees near the road, then a low hedge wohld be the right choice. Miss Tarr suggests either Alpine currant, Japanese barberry, or dwarf ninebark. Keep these hedges trimmed at about 3 feet or lower. But if you live in town, a hedge at the front or side of your lawn or your neighbors' lawns will break up the clean flow of lawn-to-lawn up and down the street. It will give a tightened, small look to each separate piece of property.

Don't Forget To Stop

When you use your driveway, remember that Iowa law says you must come to a dead stop before you enter the public thoroughfare. Otherwise you are liable for any accident that might occur as you pull out into the road. Norval Wardle, safety specialist at Iowa State College, suggests you put up your own stop sign at the exit of your drive. You owe this reminder and safety precaution to visiting friends and relatives, as well as to yourself and family.

INSECTS CAN RUIN SEED OF ALFALFA, RED CLOVER

Insects can ruin a crop of alfalfa or red clover seed. That's why it's good insurance to spray so these valuable seed crops can be saved.

Two sprays are necessary, each made up of 1 pound of actual DDT per acre applied when the plants are 4 to 6 inches in height and again just before plants bloom.

These two applications should control most injuries insects such as leaf hoppers, lygus bugs and other plant bugs. If grasshoppers are around, 1½ lbs. of taxaphene should be added to the DDT spray, says R. J. Walstrom, Iowa State College entomologist.

If pollinating insects are not plentiful, it's a good idea to put two to four colonies of honey bees per acre in the legume field or in an adjacent field. Particular care must be taken so pollinating insects aren't killed while spraying for other insects. Sprays should not be permitted to drift over the colonies of bees, nor should spraying be done during bloom when bees are working the blossoms.

Anyone desiring additional information may contact Walstrom at Iowa State College, Ames.

SOIL-APPLIED FERTILIZER IS BETTER THAN LIQUID

Iowa farmers who are looking toward increasing crop yields with liquid fertilizers will be ahead if they stick to soil-applied commercial fertilizers, according to H. B. Cheney, of Iowa State College.

Cheney describes liquid fertilizers as soluble salts of high-analysis fertilizers that are sold with the recommendation that they be sprayed on growing plants.

Cheney cites two main drawbacks to relying on liquid fertilizers: The plant food nutrients in liquid fertilizers usually cost 5 to 10 times as much as when they are purchased in commercial fertilizer for soil application. And a farmer can't put on enough of the fertilizer for the yield increase he wants without danger of burning crop leaves such as corn.

Because of this danger, only low concentrations of the fertilizer salts can be applied on the plants, Cheney points out. A commonly suggested rate of application is 2 pounds per acre. If all the nutrients in it are completely utilized, this amount of fertilizer may add ½ bushel to the corn yield per acre, he says.

Minor elements such as copper, menganese, iron and others can be supplied where needed by spraying since the plant requires very small amounts of them, according to Cheney. But few Iowa soils show deficiencies of minor elements.

Anhydrous ammonia may be called a liquid fertilizer, but it is actually applied in the soil and not on the plant. It is a satisfactory source of ntirogen when it can be purchased at a price comparable with solid nitrogen fertilizers.

HELLO FOLKS

Important Job

ONE REASON that women swarm to the offices of psychiatrists is that they don't like their jobs.

Marriage is a job; a tremendous job. No chance that ever comes to her in her single life is half as important as is this new job, which a woman assumes of her own free will.

It means a change in everything, for her. It means she has agreed to live with this comparative stranger in circumstances entirely new. It means that she has to give up her way, at least half of the time, work for him and with him, worry over his worries, adapt her enjoyments to what amuses and interests him, and all the time be going through delicate and emotional crises, that, in her girlhood, she could not possibly have foreseen.

If Children Come

If children come there must be faced all the phases of life's most tremendous experience, with its mental, moral and physical significances. If the decision between this young couple is against assuming the responsibility of children, then serious injury is sometimes done to the woman's soul and mind. She may quite readily agree to the no-family plan, but she is being thwarted, and deep inside she knows it. That any man can influence her to keep her children from her arms is deeply hurtful to her dignity; children fulfill her reason for being, and she is cheated without them.

". . . lives with this stranger . . ."

Yes, it's a business, marriage, and a girl ought to go into it determining to be better and wiser than she was before, willing to give up such pleasures and interests as cannot be shared, willing to sacrifice a good deal today for the sake of tomorrow.

Men starting new business ventures count on sacrifice and hard work in these years of getting established. Women marrying rarely do, nowadays. And yet the success of a marriage depends almost entirely upon the woman.

Unless a tremendous amount of spiritual goodwill, and the hourly daily use of common sense, reasonable humility, humor, energy, inspiration is put into this dangerous intimacy, any marriage will go on the rocks. Then there will be divorce, or the desperate appeal to some complete stranger to listen to the whole stupid story and try to straighten it out.

Trouble with Women

Over and over again, a successful psychiatrist told me, the trouble with a woman, when he digs deep down into her consciousness for it, is that she is not quite as fortunate as some other woman in her group.

If we American women have a typical fault, it seems to me, it is that. Each one of us is keeping her eye on a few contemporaries who seem to be just ahead of us all along the line A woman named Vonnie Strong of Hartford wrote me a few weeks ago about the poison that is eating her life.

"Diane has always had everything I wanted," she writes. "I married first, I have three girls. Dear little girls, but with straight hair, and one wears glasses. Di married the man of whom I had hopelessly dreamed, and of course she had boy, girl, boy, all three beauties. We go up to a river cabin for vacations; it's lovely, we have fishing, boating, picnics. Di has always had a cabin near ours. This year she and Dan are going abroad. I'm nice looking; my clothes are usually given me by Tom's mother, or friends. Di's beautiful, and she buys all the clothes she wants. She's nice, too; we are friends. She's not spoiled. But now, just this week, Dan's had a promotion, more money, and a junior partnership.

"Now why is that?" demands Vonnie. "I'd be happy, if it weren't for Di. I wish she'd just have a good dose of trouble, I really do. I want to pity her. I want her out of my life. I hear something new about her every day and I just have to take it. This has been going on for ten years, since we were in high school; I don't want to go on this way the rest of my life. What shall I do?"

No European woman could have written this letter. They take marriage seriously and work shoulder to shoulder with their men; each woman achieving whatever she can with her own particular resources and materials.

The other day I heard a certain famous golfer quoted. His name is Hogan.

When asked what he thought was the reason for his success Mr Hogan said that it might be because he never noticed what his opponents and rivals were doing. The only thing was his own play.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Some wallpaper is washable and some isn't, but it can be made washable by applying a thin, even coat of clear shellac. Once the shellac is on, most stains and spatterings can be wiped off at once with a damp cloth.

For grease spots and similar blemishes on wallpaper, try these: Hold a clean white blotter over the spot with a warm iron for several minutes. The heat should melt the oil or grease so it can be absorbed by the blotter.

Plaster of paris is good stuff with which to patch walls; but, unless you're nimble, it may get dry and hard before the job is finished To forestall that, mix about a tablespoonful of ordinary flour with every cup of plaster of paris.

* * *

Rub the wallpaper stain with a piece of fresh white bread. Let the bread crumble away as you rub, and often the dirt will crumble with it.

Fill Those Bare Spots in Canning Cupboards
(See Recipes Below)

Do Preserving Now

LATE FRUITS AND VEGETABLES are now ready to be put up in jars, whether you want to finish filling your own canning shelves or lay in a supply for holiday giving. Good results are not so much a matter of talent, but rather of care given to a few simple instructions.

Before finishing the canning, have a plan in mind. If you need some whole fruits to complete dessert plans, then that's the thing to put up If your relishes need a bit of rounding out, then plan to put up a few jars of pickled peaches or some vegetable pickles.

Jams and butters should come in for their share of attention, too, unless you already have enough spreads for mealtime and lunch boxes. If you want to give a few jars away as presents, decide how many you'll need and go to work with these recipes you'll treasure after trying once.

Pear and Peach Jam
(Makes 8 6-ounce glasses)

2 cups finely chopped pears
1½ cups finely chopped peaches
1 box powdered pectin
4½ cups sugar

Add powdered pectin and sugar to the chopped pears and chopped peaches. Mix well Heat to boiling, stirring constantly. When a full rolling boil is reached, boil for 1 minute. Remove from heat and skim. Seal in hot sterilized glasses.

Pickled Watermelon Rind
(Makes 5 pints)

Cut off all the green rind and pink part of the watermelon, then cut the white rind into small cubes (about 1-inch in size). Cover with hot water. Parboil until it can be pierced with a fork, but be careful not to let it get soft. For 20 cups of rind, make the following syrup.

7 cups sugar
2 cups vinegar
¼ teaspoon oil of cloves
¼ teaspoon oil of cinnamon

When the rind has been parboiled, drain off the water, bring the syrup to boiling point, then pour over the rind. Let this stand in the kettle overnight. In the morning drain off the syrup, reheat it and pour it back. Next morning do the same. The third morning, heat both the rind and syrup and seal in jars. Using the oil of cinnamon and cloves keeps the cubes clear and almost transparent.

Pickled Peaches
(Makes about 3 quarts)

6 pounds, about 20 peaches, medium size
4 cups sugar
2 cups vinegar
4 three-inch sticks cinnamon
1 piece whole ginger
3 tablespoons whole cloves

Select ripe, firm peaches. Scald, peel, cut in halves and remove pits or leave whole, as desired. Peel just enough fruit to be cooked at one time to prevent browning of fruit. Combine sugar and vinegar and bring to boil. Add spices, tied loosely in a cheesecloth bag, and boil 5 minutes. Add peaches, enough to fill one jar. Simmer gently just until tender. Pack while hot into sterilized jars, covering fruit with syrup. Seal at once.

6 cups sugar

¼ to ½ teaspoon cayenne pepper

Combine seasonings and vinegar. Boil. Add cucumbers and onions. Heat to simmering. Be careful to avoid boiling as that makes pickles soft. Pack hot in clean jars and seal immediately.

3½ cups prepared fruit
4½ cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare the fruit. Peel and core about 1½ pounds fully ripe pears. Chop very fine or grind. Pit (do not peel) about 1½ pounds fully ripe plums. Cut in small pieces and chop. Add ¼ cup water; bring to a boil and simmer, covered, 5 minutes. Combine fruits and measure 3½ cups into a large saucepan.

TO MAKE THE JAM: Measure sugar and set aside. Place saucepan holding fruit over high heat. Add powdered fruit pectin and stir until mixture comes to a hard boil. At once stir in sugar. Bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat, skim, ladle quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once.

4½ cups prepared fruit
7½ cups sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare the fruit. Peel and pit about 1½ pounds soft ripe peaches. Grind or chop very fine. Pit (do not peel) about 1 pound fully ripe plums. Cut in small pieces and chop. Combine fruits and measure 4½ cups into a very large saucepan.

TO MAKE THE JAM: add sugar to fruit in saucepan and mix well. Place over high heat, bring to a full rolling boil, and boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and at once stir in bottled fruit pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for 5 minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Ladle quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once.

LYNN SAYS:
Clever Food Tricks
Keep Appetites from Wilting

Summer tends to chase appetites away, but who wouldn't perk up for dessert if it's an icy wedge of cantaloupe topped with a scoop of vanilla ice cream, then laced with sweetened blueberries?

Cubes of pineapple, chunks of watermelon, thick slices of bananas and a sprinkling of blackberries gives you a true summer salad of beauty and flavor. Pass a sweet French dressing with this.

Iced tea will look prettier if it's served with cubes made with a slice of lemon and a slice of orange plus a sprig of mint.

Deviled eggs are a welcome sight on the salad plate, if they're made extra nourishing and tasty by mashing some deviled ham with the yolks before refilling the whites.

Lemonade can be just one of those beverages, but everyone will perk up at the sight of a glass of lemonade which has been tinted pink with maraschino cherry juice. Brings to mind the circus!

Quick Agreement in Korea Unlikely; Control Fight Confused Main Street

A LONG WAY FROM PEACE—As much as the people in the home towns of the nation desire peace, the majority approved the United Nation's flat refusal to talk about withdrawal of allied troops from Korea. The UN pointed out, and rightly so, that the question was purely political and could not be discussed at the preliminary talks.

Most observers are inclined to believe the Reds will withdraw their demand that the issue be put on the agenda. If they don't withdraw, it is almost a certainty that truce talks will collapse.

Red General
General Nam Il, head of Communist delegation to peace talks in Kaesong, issued demand of withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea.

Even if the troop-withdrawal issue is solved, however, home towners should realize it will not necessarily mean a cease-fire in Korea. It will be merely an agreement on what subjects to discuss in seeking a cease-fire.

The issue of withdrawing all foreign troops from Korea will come up again in the main talks. As a result, there is only one logical conclusion the home towner can draw; the world is a long way from peace.

SHADOWS OF 1952—The long shadows of 1952—the presidential election year—again fell across the national scene with a speech by Sen. Robert A. Taft.

In an address described as the jump-off for his bid for the 1952 GOP presidential nomination, Taft described the Korean conflict as "a useless and expensive war brought about by the Truman administration."

Despite the fact he approved intervention in Korea, Taft charged that the United States is involved in a "useless and expensive war."

Besides attacking the administration's foreign policy, Taft promised that the GOP would restore "honesty and integrity to government" after the 1952 election and end "the low moral tone, the dishonesty and the inefficiency" of the Democratic administration.

CONTROL FIGHT CONFUSING—To most home towners the battle over the price control bill, which should by this time be the law of the land, has been a fight of confusion. The house and senate versions of the bill differed in many details. And even one representative, when asked how his amendment to the bill would work, replied he didn't know.

For the average American, it has been much the same. He has been unable to understand the many details of the bill and the conflicting viewpoints of the proponents and opponents of price legislation. Only one thing he understood the administration wanted a stiffer price control law, but seemed doomed to defeat.

The administration contended that old controls should be extended and strengthened. That the old law was inadequate, particularly in controls of food prices, rents and credit. A stronger law was needed in the face of government defense spending during the coming months.

These arguments, however, did not impress congress. Opponents of the administration argued that the President just urged stronger controls as a "power grab". Skillful lobbyists for business interests also battled to weaken controls.

Just before the final version was due out of the house-senate committee, observers believed the administration would be thankful for any kind of bill and that it would be signed immediately upon receipt by the White House.

TRAINING PROGRAM OVER—Thousands of World War II veterans in the small towns and big towns of the nation received educational benefits under the GI bill that expired last week.

And despite the abuses of the program, educators, congress and the veterans administration agree that it has produced benefits the nation will feel for a long time to come. Thousands of veterans reaped educational benefits that they could not have otherwise afforded.

Approximately 7,600,000 veterans received training for an average of 15 months each. They drew $8,700 billion in subsistence. The rest of the $12,400 billion cost went for tuition, fees, equipment, books and counseling.

Veterans college enrollment hit its peak in December, 1947, when 1,158,000 dischargees crowded back to the campus. To date, a total of 2,200,000 veterans have studied in institutions of higher learning. But even more—3,300,000—have taken courses below college level in nearly 38,000 grade schools, high schools, vocational, trade, business and correspondence schools.

SPECIAL FLOOD APPEAL—For the first time since 1938, the American Red Cross launched a general disaster fund appeal in an effort to raise $5,000,000 to help 45,880 families affected by the midwest floods.

Flood waters of the Missouri river caused millions of dollars of damage in Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Illinois. It was possibly the most costly flood in the history of the nation.

In the four-state area, the Red Cross was reported housing 17,500 flood victims in 80 shelters and feeding 42,600.

King Is Assassinated
Prince Naif (left), was appointed regent of Jordan after the assassination of his father, King Aboullah (right). The king was shot as he entered a mosque in his capital of Amman. In center is King Faisal of Iraq.

PRICE WARS END—According to a senate report the price wars that started in New York after the Supreme Court's "fair trade" decision have all but died out.

The report said cutting of fair-trade merchandise occurred in 43 of 123 leading trade centers throughout the country. In the 43 cities, only 825 of 77,241 stores set prices on one or more items of merchandise below the resale price recommended or set by the manufacturers."

The report showed Denver leading the list with price cuts in 300 stores, Detroit second with 175, and New York third with 100.

JAPANESE TREATY NEAR—The possibility of a quick Japanese peace treaty became evident last week when the United States invited 50 nations, including Russia, to join in signing the agreement at a conference opening September 4 in San Francisco.

Missing from the invitation list were the Communist and Nationalist governments of China, South Korea, and Italy.

Although the Russians were invited, they are expected to refuse to sign the treaty, which the Soviet has denounced. In all liklihood, however, the Russians will send delegates to the conference to attack the treaty.

APPROPRIATION

Senate Group Approves Farm Work Fund

A bill calling for $751,000,000 in new cash and authorizing $262,000,000 in loans for various farm programs was approved by the Senate appropriations committee. The group, however, ordered a department of agriculture payroll reductional of 10 per cent below President Truman's budget.

Besides the cash and loan money, the bill authorizes the spending of some $172,177,264 automatically set aside by law for use by the department farm programs.

The $751,000,000 in cash is some $34,400,000 more than the amount voted by the house, but is $69,000,000 below the amount the President requested.

The boost in cash came chiefly in a $24,000,000 increase in funds for soil conservation.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE
BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

Question: I just finished the staggering task of removing some casein paint from a bathroom ceiling, by using a strong water softener solution and a scraper. I am now down to the plaster Do I treat the bare plaster the same as when new; that is, by using sizing, undercoat and then paint? I had to remove the casein paint because it started to peel and let go of the ceiling.

Answer: You did all right, for you succeeded in doing what you started out to do. But the water softening solution should all be thoroughly washed off, for if you let it stay on the ceiling, it will continue to work on your new paint and spoil the job Use plenty of water for the wash-off. When the ceiling is quite dry, apply two coats of enamel undercoater and a finish of enamel following the directions on the label. Where you made your original mistake was in putting casein paint on the bathroom ceiling. The steam loosened the paint and caused it to peel Enamel is the right kind of finish for bathroom and kitchen surfaces (unless you are going to use other hard finishes for the walls). Flat wall paints are not supposed to be used for these rooms.

Coal Was Created Before Human Advent

What is coal? How was it made? Well, it all started many millions of years ago, in what is called the Carboniferous Period. We sometimes call it the Coal Age. The climate was very warm and moist all over the earth. There were heavy rains. Plants grew fast and luxuriantly, especially in swampy areas.

In our country, these great swamps extended in all directions to where we find coal today in what is now Pennsylvania and the whole Appalachian range, the middle Atlantic states, the Rocky Mountains, and even the far away Pacific Coast. The forest trees resembled giant ferns, reeds, and mosses, rising to heights of 100 to 120 feet, and many feet in diameter. Other trees looked much like enormous ferns, climbing 50 feet into the air.

Everything was green and lush in this strange world. The giant trees, ferns, grasses, insect life and other creatures, died, fell into the swamps and became part of the sea life buried there. Heavy rains washed soil and sand from high places into the swampy lowlands. Land gradually sank. The great inland seas advanced and covered up these peat-like bogs, keeping out air and bacteria that cause decay. Again conditions on the earth changed. The land was raised up and once more forests grew, flourished, and died. Again the land sank and the seas advanced.

This process continued over and over through untold thousands of years. The sunshine, whose warmth and magic made these forests, was buried with the vegetation. Slowly the forests piled up one atop of the other, the peat layers began changing into something we now call lignite, and the enormous deposits of dead leaves, branches, trunks, insect life, and sea life were transformed slowly into coal and other minerals.

The quality of legume and grass silage can be improved by letting the green material partially wilt before putting it into the silo, and by adding 60 pounds of molasses, or 150 pounds of ground shelled corn, or 200 pounds of ground ear corn to each ton as the silo is filled.

MRS. HERREN DISCOVERS THAT HADACOL BRINGS REAL RELIEF

HADACOL Helps Folks Who Suffer Weak, Run-Down Conditions, Nervousness, Sleeplessness Caused by an Upset Stomach and Poor Appetite, If Due to Deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron

In these days of the fast pace of life, with folks always hurrying, you simply have to feel well to keep going. And if you are weak and tired, nervous, have no appetite, don't sleep well and feel run-down, life can be mighty unpleasant. Mrs. Martha Herren of 113-C N. Chevy Chase Drive, Glendale, California, used to feel that way. But she heard how many folks who suffered these conditions when due to a deficiency of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron were being helped by today's great HADACOL. She began taking HADACOL and now feels so good that she just can't say enough for HADACOL.

Mrs. Martha Herren

Here is what Mrs. Herren says, in her own words, about HADACOL: "For a time I had been run-down, was just simply tired all the time. I was nervous, couldn't sleep well and didn't have an appetite at all. I would just pick at my food. I started taking HADACOL, as I had heard so much about it. In just a couple of weeks I could certainly tell a difference. My appetite picked up—I was actually hungry at meal times. I was no longer as nervous and tired. I simply can't say enough for HADACOL. I am still taking it, and believe me, I will always have it on hand. I know how much it has really helped me, and sincerely, HADACOL is wonderful."

Yes, HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of weak, run-down conditions, poor appetite, nervousness and sleeplessness caused by an upset stomach when due to a deficiency of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron in the system.

AND EVEN MORE IMPORTANT! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps prevent these conditions from returning when due to such deficiencies. Now, that's the kind of product you have been waiting for. That's the kind you should buy and start taking at once. And HADACOL is so easy to take—comes in pleasant liquid form and is so easily and quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work for you immediately.

HADACOL Is So Effective

Because HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ and to every part of your body.

You may have tried other Vitamin preparations or other Vitamin and Mineral preparations, so we make you this offer. Try a bottle of HADACOL today if you need Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron. You be the judge. If you do not believe that HADACOL is the best Vitamin and Mineral preparation you have ever taken, we will gladly send you back your money. That's our positive money-back guarantee. You take no chances.

So be fair to yourself. Don't put off finding relief another day. If you are suffering from these deficiency-caused ailments, you owe it to yourself to start taking HADACOL today.

Refuse Substitutes

And remember! There's only one HADACOL. Don't let anyone tell you something else is "just as good." Insist on genuine HADACOL. You risk nothing because HADACOL is sold on a strict money-back guarantee.

Sold at all drug counters. Trial size, $1.25, but buy the large economical family-size, only $3.50. If your dealer does not sell HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana.

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded businesses and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

The old excuse, "I forgot," has been used by all of us at one time or another.

But this time-worn phrase doesn't pardon you from the responsibility of keeping your driver's license in force by renewing it every two years. Under the Iowa "birthday law," every Iowa driver must renew his driver's license "within the 30 days preceding your birthday, every second year"

That's why your Iowa Safety Congress urges motorists: Check your driver's license expiration date NOW!

Right now, while you're thinking about it, get out your license and see when it expires—the day, month and year Then, tie a "mental string" around your finger to remind yourself to renew it during the 30-day period prior to that date.

Don't forget . . . or you may regret!

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

The boss came bouncing out of his office at 4 o'clock, slapped his hands together and shouted, "Close up shop, folks. This is party night. Everybody go home and get dressed. See you all at 6 sharp"

In ten minutes, the office was empty, except for the girl at the switchboard, who had to stay, and John Stevens, a quiet young man coming up fast in the organization.

John worked until 5, then was 15 minutes late for the start of the office dinner. By 8:30, though, when the crowd began to sing "old songs," John was completely relaxed for the first time in months.

When the boss and his wife went home about 11 and the older couples began trailing off, John was unwilling to see the party die. He felt he had at least an extra hour coming. "More overtime" he called it.

Since he had rationed himself to only two drinks during the evening - he was cautious about such things - Stevens joined a small group going on "to a place down the road" for a nightcap.

Later, he moved on with a smaller group - the "hard core of the party" they called themselves - to one last place for one last drink.

About 12:45, Stevens was driving alone. As in everything, he had been careful. His four well-spaced, well-nursed drinks were causing him only a warm sense of relaxation and ease.

A sharp blow on the front of his car woke him just as he was driving off the left shoulder of the highway. Behind him, at the edge of the road, lay a woman, her skull fractured and her face virtually split open.

It was Death who worked overtime that night And Death never takes a holiday.

They enjoyed every minute of their vacation trip and got to see a lot of country.

Iowa Electric Light & Power Co. Now Serving This Area

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

Mr. and Mrs. Wm Tiggeman announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter Velma to Robert Robertson of Thompson, Ia. The wedding will take place Sept. 23rd at the Lutheran Church at Thompson.

ELECTRICAL CO. ADVERTISEMENT FOR RURAL ELECTRIFICATION WEEK

This week The Times is printing a large advertisement for the Iowa Power And Light Co., formerly the Central States Electric Company. The advertisement tells of the Rural Electrification Week.

The Central States Electric Company at Garner was one of the early pioneers in rural electrification in Hancock County. Farmers around Garner and Klemme have enjoyed electrical service for many years, long before REA was ever thought of.

It might be interesting to our readers when we recall that the early rural lines extended by Central States Electric Company to give farmers in this area electric power and light, attracted nation-wide attention. Experiments were carried out on a great number of farms in Hancock County at the time. Results were checked and tabulated for future reference for rural electrification, which today, is quite universal, especially in Iowa and the agricultural mid-west.

The Central States Electric Company is an investor owned organization and there are many Hancock County folks who have held stock in the company for many years.

Taxes Up ---

TAXES GOING UP AGAIN IN HANCOCK COUNTY

The average tax for each Hancock county citizen in 1950 totaled $87.50 according to a report from the office of County Auditor Maynard Schoneman. This is an increase of 139.79% over 1940 when the average was $36.49.

Total tax assessed and certified to the county treasurer for collection in 1940 was $562,073.23, and the population listed in the 1940 census report was 15,402. In 1950 the total tax certified for collection was $1,319,197.34, and the population of Hancock county recently released by Federal Census officials totals 15,077.

A prevue of 1951 budgets already received in the office of Auditor Schoneman for collection in 1952 indicates that taxes will again be substantially higher in 1952.

The 1950 dollar as compared with the 1940 dollar is reported to be worth approximately 59c which would indicate inflation totaling approximately 72.41% thus it would seem that the increase in taxation is much more rapid than the deflation of the dollar.

"POWER COMPANY MERGES"

Stockholders of the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company and the Central States Electric Company, meeting separately in Cedar Rapids August 16th, overwelmingly approved plans for merging Central States Electric Company into the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company.

At the meeting of the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company stockholders 84 per cent of the outstanding stock was represented, either in person or by proxy and 99.85 per cent of the votes cast were in favor of the merger.

At the Central States meeting 88 percent of the outstanding stock was represented, either in person or by proxy, and of the votes cast 99.72 per cent favored the merger.

In discussing the merger with stockholders, President Sutherland Dows in response to a question stated that the per share earnings of the merged companies would be slightly improved due to certain economics of generation and administration, which would be obtained when the properties are operated as one company instead of two.

The merger becomes effective immediately and customers of the Central States Electric Co. will shortly be receiving their bills from the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company. The entire personnel of the two companies will be utilized in the merger, Mr. Dows stated.

Are You a Citizen?

Lesson for August 26, 1951

LET'S come down home. The official title of this week's lesson is "The Christian's Responsibility in Public Life." That is a big thing, a wide circle; but the center of the circle is you, my friend, and right around you is the community in which you live.

Dr. Foreman

What kind of town is it? Not how big, but how good. It doesn't have to be a town at all. It may be a section of open country, a few miles of farms, ranches or woodland. But it is some kind of community.

In New York state the Citizen's Council prepared the following set of questions which can be used to help you rate your community. After each set of these questions write down either 10 for good, 5 for fair, or 0 for poor.

Rate Your Town

"1. Education: Does your community make modern education available to every child, youth and adult? Are its schools uncrowded, properly equipped, and in good physical condition? Are the teachers highly qualified and well paid?

"2. Housing and Planning: Is every family decently housed? Is there continual planning for improvement of highways and other community essentials? Are parking, transportation problems under control?

"3. Religion: Is full opportunity for religious expression offered to every individual in your community? Are your churches strong and well supported?

"4. Equality of Opportunity: Do people of different races, religions, nationalities have full chance for employment and taking part in community life? Are dangerous tensions kept at a minimum by avoidance of discrimination and injustices?

"5. Economic Development: Are good jobs available? Do labor, industry, agriculture and government work together to insure the sound economic growth of your community?

"6. Cultural Opportunities: Are your citizens' lives strengthened by ample opportunity to enjoy music, art, and dramatics? Does your community have a professionally administered library service which benefits people of all ages? Do your newspapers and radio carefully review the affairs of the community?

"7. Recreation: Are there enough supervised playgrounds and facilities for outdoor activities? Does your community offer full opportunity to take part in arts and crafts, in photography, and in other hobbies?

"8. Health and Welfare: Are medical care and hospitalization readily available? Is provision made for underprivileged children, the aged, and the handicapped? Can families in trouble secure the help they need?

"9. Government: Do capable citizens seek public office? Are your officials concerned above all with community betterment? Does controversy stem from honest differences of opinion and not from squabbles over privilege?

"10. Community Organization: Is there any organization (community forum or the like) representative of the whole community, working for the advancement of all? Do your citizens have opportunity to learn about and take part in their local affairs? Is there an organized community-wide discussion program?"*

It's Up to You

NOW add the scores you have put down for each of the ten groups of questions. A total of 100 is fine; 50, fair.

But now look over those questions again. Is there anything you could do, personally, about each of those things? If so, have you done it? Have you done as much as you could? Have you ever tried to get other people interested?

You can make another score sheet and head it: How I Rate as a Citizen. Then grade yourself under each of those ten heads, 10 for doing all you can, 5 for doing a little something, 0 for nothing at all. If you are a Christian, be especially strict with yourself.

If you were out of it, would your community miss you as much as you miss salt when some one forgets to put it on the potatoes? If you left your community, would it seem a bit darker there after you were gone?

Use Fruits, Eggs, Milk To Help Make Desserts Popular and Nutritious

CARE FOR SOMETHING NEW in desserts? Who wouldn't, especially when they're delectable to eat and add something to the nutritional status of the meal?

Desserts should not be just something sweet and caloric; they should serve some concrete purpose in the diet, such as adding eggs, milk and fruit which are not eaten as a first course or supplement.

If any homemaker is having difficulties with her family taking what they should in the way of food, dessert is an easy, simple way to serve the daily requirement of health-giving elements.

Here's a good dessert for all members of the family, and pretty too:

Spanish Coconut Cream
(Serves 6)

- 1½ envelopes unflavored gelatin
- 3 cups milk
- ¼ cup granulated sugar
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 3 eggs, separated
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 1 cup shredded coconut

Soften gelatin in ¼ cup cold milk for 5 minutes. Heat remaining milk in top of double boiler with 2 tablespoons sugar and salt. Add softened gelatin, stirring until dissolved. Beat egg yolks, pour some over the hot milk mixture, while stirring Return to double boiler and continue cooking, stirring constantly, over hot water for about 7 minutes, or until mixture coats the spoon. Beat egg whites until stiff; gradually add 2 tablespoons sugar, while beating. Fold into custard mixture that has been chilled until sirupy. Add vanilla and coconut and blend. Turn into molds that have been rinsed with cold water; chill. Unmold and serve with Cherry-Almond sauce.

Cherry-Almond Sauce
(Makes 2 cups)

- 1 cup cherry juice or water
- 1½ cups granulated sugar
- Few grains salt
- 2 drops almond extract
- 2 cups pitted red cherries (1 No. 2 can)
- ⅓ cup slivered, blanched almonds.

Heat cherry juice, sugar and salt over low heat. Bring to a boil for a few minutes, until syrup is thick. Add almond extract, cherries and cool. Fold in almonds.

You'll get a generous quota of vitamin C when you serve this unusual cobbler for dessert. Grapefruit sections can be combined with any berries in season or fresh or canned peaches:

Florida Cobbler
(Serves 6)

- 2 No. 2 cans grapefruit sections
- 1 pint berries or 2 cups sliced peaches
- 1¼ cups sugar or honey
- 1⅔ cups sifted flour
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 5 tablespoons lard
- ¼ cup milk (about)

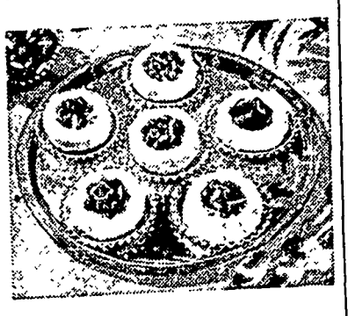
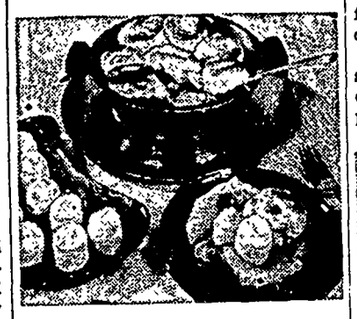
Drain grapefruit sections; combine with berries or peaches in 2-quart casserole. Blend in 1 cup honey or sugar Place in oven



Who wouldn't like a dessert like this? Spanish Coconut Cream molded in small ring forms, then filled with whole cherry, almond-flavored sauce, is as pretty as it is tasty. At the same time it makes it easy to get much needed eggs, milk and fruit into the daily diet.



You don't always have to get the citrus fruit at breakfast, especially when you can include grapefruit segments along with berries in season or peaches in a delightful, tangy cobbler like this. Hard sauce molded in butter forms makes the pretty garnish.

LYNN SAYS:
Keep Meals Interesting With Imaginative Touches

Corn pudding baked with strips of bacon or sliced Canadian bacon is an excellent and economical supper dish. Cucumber salad makes a good team with a hot dish.

A cup of corn, cut from those cobs left from supper, make into corn fritters. Add to 1 cup corn kernels, 1 beaten egg. Mix together ¼ cup flour, ½ teaspoon salt, dash of pepper and 1 teaspoon baking powder. Fry in shallow fat.

When serving Spanish rice as a vegetable, make it prettier and tastier by garnishing with parboiled, sauteed green pepper rings.

Buttered noodles served with Swedish meat balls and gravy are much more tempting when they are topped with sauteed mushroom caps.

Heat canned tomato soup with a few herbs for seasoning, and serve with fried Perch Fillets for a zesty dinner. Lima beans make an attractive vegetable with this main dish.

Korean Peace Talks Develop Slowly; Control Bill Viewed With Cynicism

THE PEACE FRONT—As expected the Korean peace talks have developed slowly. The shooting war in that bloody country may not end for weeks, if then. And it will be years before a feeling of security develops among the South Korean people.

As things stand now, the Allies and Reds are at loggerheads over several questions. The main one, however, is the establishment of a cease-fire buffer zone. The Reds want it established along the 38th parallel. The Allies want it along present battle lines.

U. N. Delegate

Vice Adm. C. Turner Joy is chief U. N. delegate to the Kaesong peace talks. He receives his instructions from Gen. Matthew Ridgway, U. N. commander in the far east.

The Allies contend: (1) The present positions, based on ridges, are more defensible militarily than the 38th parallel; (2) The parallel is where the Red invasion began June 25, 1950. It is viewed in many quarters as a symbol of U. N. defeat, and a settlement along that line is bitterly opposed by the South Korean government.

It may be that some sort of compromise can be worked out on the question, but not without long and exhausting talks.

Meanwhile, the Reds have resorted to their old tricks of injecting political issues into the discussions. The Reds have complained of Allied air and naval power and to the bombing of peaceful Korean villages — a long-familiar Red propaganda twist for air strikes.

THE FIGHTING FRONT— And while the high brass talks of peace, United Nations troops continue to fight and die in Korea Artillery rumbles, U N. troops probe at Red lines, and the Reds made counter thrusts.

The U S. army reported the Communists have staged a tremendous build-up of armed forces since the cease-fire talks began and pointedly expressed hope this was not a sign of bad faith.

Here again is evidence of Communist thinking and policy Hanging on the ropes when the peace talks started, the Reds took full advantage of U N let-up in attack, to show good faith during the talks, to build up their own military forces and supplies.

The Communists have moved more supplies near the front lines than needed to maintain troops while the talks are underway In addition, they have moved new units and thousands of individual replacements south into the battle lines.

THE EUROPEAN FRONT—While there were talks of peace in the far east, the free nations prepared to meet aggression in Europe.

New plans for defense were announced by George C. Marshall, secretary of defense, when he told congress the administration now plans to have 400,000 U. S. troops in Europe in 1952—nearly double the number previously estimated.

He also disclosed that U.S. allies have promised to have 2,500,000 men under arms next year and to be able to put five million men into the field within 90 days after the outbreak of any new war.

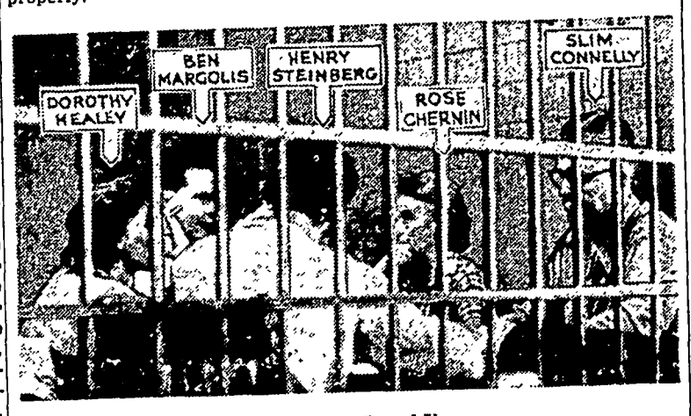
Marshall argued against any let-down in American defensive spirit resulting from the Korean armistice talks and against any congressional cuts in U. S military aid to western Europe He said he was deeply shocked at what he termed the "tragic" reaction of the American people now that peace appears in prospect in Korea.

PRICE CONTROLS—Confusion and cynicism seems the only way to describe the average home towner's reaction to the price control bill which congress has enacted. The confusion stems from the fact that few congressmen, if any, can give a complete and adequate description of how the law will work. The cynicism stems, in great part, from the belief that the debate on the issue was put on the record more for future political effect than for the purpose of clarifying the issues.

The bill permits some rollbacks on nonfarm goods and opens the way for some increases. It extends wage, price, credit, rent, and other emergency controls through next June. But controls are eased in a number of ways and the President got none of the additional authority he asked.

The United Labor Policy Committee, made up of most big organized labor groups, immediately denounced the bill. The committee termed the bill "a callous betrayal of the consumers of the nation by the reactionary coalition which rules congress."

Administration leaders contend it is short of what is needed to combat inflation. Republicans say it is a good bill, if administered properly.



Communist Round-Up

Behind bars are the four ranking Los Angeles Communists who were rounded up by the FBI last week. They are shown as they confer with their attorney, Ben Margolis (second from left).

50 MILLIONTH ELGIN—Every science has its milestones. In horology, the science of watchmaking, the first milestone occurred almost 450 years ago at Nuremburg, Germany. A clockmaker there found means of compressing the parts of a timepiece into a sturdy and compact mechanism. The Nuremburg "egg," crude and clumsy by modern standards, was the world's first watch—so called because it was carried by night watchmen.

Next month the city of Elgin, Ill., which boasts it is the town "made famous by time," will help its oldest industry celebrate another horological milestone. Scheduled for completion then is the 50 millionth timepiece to be made at Elgin—more jeweled watches than any other manufacturer in the world has yet produced.

Significantly, the 50 millionth watch is claimed to incorporate every major technical achievement since horology was a pup. In stark contrast with the first bulky pocket watch made in the same city 84 years ago, it will be only one-tenth as large, yet will be a better timekeeper.

THE VICIOUS RACKET—Federal agents last week broke up the biggest narcotics ring in the nation's history. Narcotic agents reported the arrest of 10 "salesmen" for the $30,000,000 heroin-smuggling ring. The agents also got $100,000 in counterfeit money.

The ring is believed to have smuggled as much as 50 pounds of heroin into the United States each month. It has been operating since 1949.

MORE MEAT

Cattle, Swine Crop Is Near Record

By January 1, 1952, the number of cattle and swine on the nation's farms will be near a record peak, according to a recent survey.

The country's beef-cattle may total 65,400,000. This would be 5,800,000 more than on January 1, 1951, and 7,600,000 more than at the wartime peak of 1945. This does not include dairy cattle, a source of veal and processed meats.

With this rise in beef cattle, all cattle would increase from the 80 million level of 1950 and the 84,200,000 level of 1951 to about 90 million.

The 1951 pig crop, which will hit the market in September, is estimated the second highest in the nation's history. The department of agriculture estimates that a total crop of nearly 106 million pigs is indicated for the year.

Real Estate Bargains Awaited Early Settlers

Soaring real estate prices serve to remind Americans that the early bird gets the bargain.

Peter Minuit's famous $24 purchase of Manhattan Island is only one example of the good "buys" available when the country was young.

Director Minuit's successor, Wouter Van Twiller, also got his money's worth when he gave a band of Indians about $1.65 worth of presents in exchange for 172-acre Governor's Island in New York Harbor. Staten Island, too was bought from Indians in 1631 for "certain parcels of goods."

Christopher Columbus started it all with an investment in ships estimated by various authorities at from $16,000 to $75,000, of which Columbus himself is said to have contributed the equivalent of $2,000.

William Penn received in 1861 almost all of the present state of Pennsylvania as payment for a loan of 16,000 British pounds made by his father, Admiral Sir William Penn, to King Charles II of England. At current exchange rates, this sum amounts to $44,800 In later years his descendants were paid eight times that much by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for their interests and were permitted to keep their private estates. Penn also was required to pay the king two beaver skins on January 1 each year, plus one-fifth of all gold and silver ore found within his territory.

For the province of Maryland, Lord Baltimore had to deliver two Indian arrows yearly to Windsor Castle, plus a fifth of gold and silver ores.

Early transactions shifted ownership of the present state of New Jersey several times. Charles II originally granted the area to his brother, the Duke of York, who deeded it to John Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret as joint proprietors. In 1674 Berkeley sold West Jersey for 1,000 pounds ($2,800) to two Quakers named John Fenwick and Edward Byllings. The executors of Carteret's will sold East Jersey at public auction in 1682 to William Penn and a number of associates for 3,400 pounds ($9,520).

Half interest in the state of Maine, as represented by a royal grant to Sir Ferdinando Gorges, was bought from his heirs by the state of Massachusetts in 1677 for 1,250 pounds ($3,500).

When the United States bought Louisiana Territory from Napoleon in 1803, the country got a lot for its money. The price of $15,000,000 averaged out to less than three cents an acre for the 827,000 square miles. Subsequently, the Federal Government paid nearly a billion dollars to compensate Indian tribes for their lands in the territory.

MILDEW STAINS NEED PROMPT REMOVAL

The old saying, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," holds true when you treat mildew stains on clothing, say clothing specialists at Iowa State College.

Molds flourish in hot, humid weather. They're liable to attack clothing in crowded closets or lying dampened in the ironing basket.

Your best bet is discouraging such growth is to remove causes of dampness, specialists say. Sun and air your clothes occasionally After wearing, give perspiration and other moisture time to evaporate before you hang them back in the closet. Try burning a 50-watt bulb in the closet. Its heat will help to dry the air. When you iron, sprinkle only one day's worth of ironing at a time.

If you do find mildew stain on some of your clothing, get after it right away. Brush surface mold off out of doors. Then give washable fabrics a good sudsing in soap and water. Rinse and dry in the sun If any stain remains, moisten it with lemon juice and salt, and spread in the sun to bleach. Then rinse and dry. Be careful about using this treatment on colored clothes, though.

If your fabric is not washable, there is nothing you can do about mildew at home. Take the garment to your dry cleaner, and he may be able to remove it.

FREEDOM VS. CONTROLS

Allan Kline of Vinton, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, warned a farm audience at West Branch recently that the present administration in Washington seeks socialization and nationalization of the American economy.

Kline pulled no punches in a hard-hitting attack on the administration's program in which he said, "they are tryng to outcontrol Russia." He said that a few people in the administration are "being used" and they don't realize that the program is one of nationalization. "Others, he said, "know where they're going."

The farm leader charged specifically that Charles Wilson, mobilization director, did not know what was in the bill which he urged the Congress to adopt. Kline said that when he once visited Wilson, the mobilization chief assured him that there was no plan for farm subsidies in the program. Later, Kline said, Wilson went to Congressional Committees and urged adoption of such a program.

Kline said that much of the action by Washington official is based on "fear", but, he added, "I'm one of the guys who isn't scared. I am convinced that if we stand up on our hind legs and fight we can preserve the American Way."

Kline recalled that those who oppose the administration's program are smeared and feel the full brunt of the vast propaganda machine of federal agencies. He cited his own differences with the Secertary of Agriculture as an example.

It is becoming increasingly apparent, as pointed out by Kline, that the only way we can stop socialism in this country is to root out those in Washington who destroy the American system of freedom and incentive.

HEALTH FOR ALL

Suntan Without Sunburn

We are now in the midst of the sunbathing season and, weather permitting, beaches, lawns and parks are dotted during daytime hours with people trying to "soak up a little Vitamin D."

The truth is, we are not much concerned with healthful benefits as we bask in the sun. Most of us feel that a tan or even a "glow" on the skin is becoming to us and makes us look healthier.

Sunbathing is beneficial to the average person—if it is done gradually and proper precautions are taken. But bad sunburn is neither attractive nor healthy. While over-exposure to the sun is seldom a direct cause of death, it can be dangerous because it can cause skin infection and strain on the heart and blood vessels.

The person who wants an attractive tan without going through a painful sunburn stage should get to know his own skin, how sensitive it is, whether or not it burns easily. Blondes or red-heads with fair skin are ordinarily more sensitive to sun than brunettes. Even so, a dark coloring is no guarantee against sunburn. Skins vary widely in their sensitivity to the sun's rays and everyone should get to know just how much sun his skin can take.

There are a few precautions on sunbathing which apply to everyone. Regardless of coloring, one should always acquire a tan slowly and gradually. Ten minutes, or fifteen at the most, are sufficient for the first day's sun bath. Each day following, the exposure time can be lengthened by about fifteen minutes utnil a protective tan is acquired.

It is a good idea for all sunbathers to "stay out of the noonday sun." Burning is more likely when the sun in directly overhead and its rays are short and direct. On the beach, the noon sun is especially hazardous with the added reflected glare from the sand and water.

If one of the many suntan preparations on the market today is used, it should be remembered that the best preparations can give only partial protection from the sun, so it is wise to keep watching the cloth whether or not a person is covered with lotion, oil, or cream. An obvious but dependable safeguard against sunburn is getting out of the sun before one gets too hot or too red.

Fences Going

Ackley is gradually losing its iron fences. A decorative fence which had graced the W. T. Rath residence there was removed recently, after over a half century. The iron fences were originally very handy in keeping stray stock out of the yards.

Hans Sikna, 38 year old displaced person from Latvia, arrived in Graettinger recently to make his home. He is being sponsored by the Lutheran Church there. Sikna's wife and son are under similar sponsorship at Aberdeen, South Dakota and eventually will join him at Graettinger.

KANSAS CITY MAKES GREAT PROGRESS CLEANING UP AFTER FLOOD

The Editor spent several days the past week in Kansas City, accompanying Hugh Chapman into the flooded industrial Armourdale area where Mr. Chapman, Mr. Strait and Mr. Magther own the United Manufacturing Co., wood box manufacturers.

By Saturday afternoon most of the three feet of mud had been bulldozed and trucked out of the factory and fire hose turned on to flush out the remainder and clean off the machinery. A few of the machines can be put into operation by the end of this week

The flooded area of Armourdale, Argentine and Fairfax is still a terrible looking sight and may take a couple of years to get everything cleaned up and hauled away. At least 90 per cent of the buildings and houses in the area are condemned and will have to be torn done.

The several packing plants are making good progress in cleaning up and the great stock yards are being rapidly cleaned up and rebuilt.

STYLE REVUE HIGHLIGHTS SHOW

Excitement, soft music, pretty clothes all helped to make the Hancock County 4-H Style Revue one of the highlights during the Achievement Show.

During the style revue Phyllis Hanselman of Garfield Lively Workers was announced as blue ribbon style revue girl to represent Hancock County at the Iowa State Fair. Phyllis will be at the State Fair August 26th through 29th. The Style Revue at the Iowa State Fair is scheduled at 3:30 P. M. Wednesday, August 29th. It will be held in the 4-H dining hall auditorium The outfit Phyllis modeled in the Style Revue is a two piece dress made of brown and aqua check rayon suiting. Her accessories are navy blue.

Phyllis is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hanselman.

Joice Thieman, a prospective 4-H member, and her mother, Mrs. Ed. Thieman, introduced the Revue. Rachel Brown of Garfield Lively Workers narrated as the girls came on stage. Between the junior and senior divisions Joan Shurts sang "Alice Blue Gown." During the song Deloris Thieman of Ell Tip Toppers came out modeling her blue formal that she had entered in Damon's fashion contest. Emogene Paulson was Miss Shurts' accompanist. Recognition was given to Eunice Hueneman of Liberty Busy Bees for being one of top five better grooming girls in the State Judy Brede of Avery Sunbeams played for the revue.

Following the revue Madge Scott of Boone Magor Pals announced the ribbon winners. FREEZE CORN CORRECTLY FOR GOOD FLAVOR LATER

Iowa homemakers rate corn a top favorite for their home freezers or lockers. They know freezing is the best way to preserve that fresh-from-the-garden flavor.

To assure this good flavor, Nelle Thompson, Iowa State College nutritionist, says to freeze only tender ripe ears in the full milk stage. One hour from garden to freezer is the rule. It means picking and processing small amounts at a time.

To process, husk, de-silk, sort and trim the ears. Perfect ears of corn are best, but if there are occasional bad spots, be sure to cut them off carefully Scrub ears with a stiff brush in water or under a strong spray Then scald in continuously boiling water for 4 minutes—10 minutes if you intend to freeze whole ears.

Next, cool the corn immediately by plunging it into cold water or running water from the faucet. Do this for the same length of time as you scalded Now your corn will freeze more quickly, and be easier for you to handle.

After cooling, cut off kernals with a sharp knife Or for corn on the cob, cut off ear tips and square up the ends.

Miss Thompson recommends that you now pack the corn with a 1½ percent brine solution—1 tablespoon of salt per quart of water used in an air-tight freezer container Pack it dry if you wish, she says, but its flavor may be better with the brine because all air is kept out. Never use a glass jar, it may break when the brine freezes With other containers, leave an inch head space

Farm Electrification Week
AUGUST 26th 1951

REDDY KILOWATT SALUTES All Who Have Aided in the Electrification of Iowa's Farms

BACK IN 1908 ELECTRICITY FIRST REACHED AN IOWA FARM
The first rural line on record in Iowa was built from Clarinda to the J R. Lee farm in 1908. It was a single conductor, iron wire line. W N Jackson, who built the line, suspended the wire from trees wherever possible.

ELECTRIC SERVICE IS NOW AVAILABLE TO MOST IOWA FARMS
Now 96% of Iowa farms have central station electric service. The week of August 26 is set aside to honor all those who contributed to this great project . . . including farm groups, the REA, investor-owned utilities and equipment mfgrs.

TODAY we salute the pioneers of rural electrification in Iowa: The committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture, which included representatives from the American Farm Bureau and the National Grange; Iowa State College, which, from the early days of rural electrification, has worked ceaselessly to advance better farming methods through electricity; Pioneers of the investor-owned electric companies, who started carrying electric power to their first farm customers near the turn of the century and, with Iowa State College, established a national precedent in farm utilization of electric power with the historic experimental project on the Garner farm lines in the 1920's; and the REA-financed rural electric cooperatives which, since 1935, have played a vital role in advancing the farm electrification program in Iowa. These are the pioneers . . . the men of vision who foresaw better farming and better living with the wonderful help of electric power.

The pioneering job demanded vision as well as untiring effort. As soon as the first crude lines were built to a handful of farms, a vast number of men from all of these groups joined together to lead the way toward complete rural electrification in Iowa. As power lines were pushed ever farther to bring the miracle of electricity to an ever-growing number of farms, other pioneers were working to develop new uses for electricity for more profitable farming and more comfortable farm living.

WHEREAS, Leo Paulson, Roy W. Rogeness and Swen O Rogeness have entered into a written contract filed with this Board on July 23, 1951, which is by reference thereto made a part of the proceedings of this Board, and

WHEREAS, said written agreement is intended to be in full and complete settlement of the dispute between the owners of lands in Lateral D in said District and

WHEREAS, all other property owners served by Lateral D did on July 23, 1951 expressly in writing consent to the approval of said agreement join with Leo Paulson, Roy W Rogeness, and Swen O. Rogeness and consented to the Board of Supervisors carrying out said agreement, which by reference is made a part hereof; and

WHEREAS, this Boarl has jurisdiction of all of the persons whose lands are affected by Lateral D of said District and are served thereby, and each of them has in writing consented to any assessments upon their land additional to the assessments heretofore made for the purpose of carrying into effect said agreement

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED

RESOLUTION

That the contract between Roy W Rogness, Swen O Rogeness and Leo Paulson, filed in the office of the County Auditor on July 23, 1951, and consent of the property owners in Lateral D of said district, filed therewith and attached thereto, be and the same is in all respects approved

And be it further resolved that the Resolution adopted on the 19th day of March, 1951, directing that the tile be tunnelled through the road embankment on said Highway No. 111, be and the same is rescinded, and the tile now laid through the culvert under said Highway No. 111 shall remain as now laid.

And be it further resolved that an 18-inch tile shall be laid northwesterly from the tile through said culvert to the south fence line of the Laurence Nielsen property strictly in accordance with the profile, plans and specifications prepared by L. W Mahone, engineer, and the costs of said 18-inch tile and the laying thereof shall be paid out of the funds of Lateral D of said district, which said funds would otherwise be expended in removing the tile from said culvert and tunnelling through the road embankment.

And be it further resolved that if the funds saved in the removal of said tile and the tunnelling through said embankment are insufficient to pay the costs of said extension to the south fence line of the Laurence Nielsen property, that such deficit shall be assessed against all of the lands in Lateral D of said District in proportion to the assessments heretofore made against said lands previously confirmed by this Board, and said 18-inch tile line, as above specified, shall become a part of Lateral D of said District and maintained thereby

And be it further resolved that 1,000 feet of 12-inch tile shall be laid across the lands of Leo Paulson in said Lateral D in accordance with the original plans, specifications and profile of the engineer as designed by him as to Lateral D-1, and the cost of the laying thereof shall be paid by Lateral D of said District and if there are insufficient funds with which to pay the costs of the laying thereof be and it is resolved that such deficit be raised by assessment upon all of the lands in said Lateral D in the same proportion as the same were originally assessed and classified and confirmed by this Board, which said 12-inch tile shall be paid for by Leo Paulson at his own expense.

And be it further resolved that said 12-inch tile shall be laid by Leo Paulson across his said lands at his own expense, as to cost of tile, and same shall thereafter be a private tile.

And be it further resolved that Schram Bros., the contractors, shall lay said tile to the Laurence Nellson south fence line of the Laurence Nellsen real estate in accordanco with his offer so to do without expense to said District, all of tile to be laid strictly in accordance with the profile, plans and specications of the engineer

And be it further resolved that 20 per cent of the cost of said additional work shall be retained until the final acceptance of said work by said Board

And be it further resolved that the cost of the laying of said 12-inch tile shall be 30 cents per foot, and the contractors shall file with the County Auditor their bond therefor as provided by law, and said work shall be and is considered as additional labor and work and shall be governed by the same rules and laws respecting additional work to be done by the contractor, but said contractor shall not be responsible for the cost of either branches of said tile and all be responible only for the laying thereof and be it resolved that said contractors shall have the laying of said tile line herein contemplated fully completed on or before the 6th day of August, 1951

And be it further resolved that the Board of Supervisors shall purchase and pay for the planks and credit Drainage District No 153, No 153, Lateral D, thereof, for such payment.

It appearing to this Board that the engineer in the construction of Lateral C across the lands of C O Peterson, described as the NW¼ NW¼ of Sec 29 SE¼ NW¼ of Sec 28, SW¼ NE¼ of Sec 28, NW¼ NE¼ of Sec 28, and the NE ¼ NW¼ of Sec 27, all in T 97 N, R. 25 W, made certain changes during the construction from the plans as originally designed for the betterment of said District and be and it is resolved that the changes so made by the engineer be and the same are in all respects confirmed and the tile as laid across said land is approved and the change in such plans, though a minor one, is approved by the Board, and said tile shall hereafter be ome a part of said District and maintained thereby, and be it further resolved that said ditch be filled to the ground level as recommended by the engineer, and that such filling be maintained by the District.

And be it further resolved that whereas the engineer on July 23, 1951 called attention to a considerable amount of wash in the vicitnity of Stations 5 to 7 of said Lateral C and has recommended that dirt be brought in to fill the ditch to the original ground level in such area as a preventive against future washing, and that an intake be built near Station 8 plus 25 to pick up water and has recommended that such dirt be taken from the spoil bank on the open ditch.

Now, therefore, be and it is hereby resolved that said Ditch be filled to the ground level as recommended by the engineer, and that proper intakes be provided

MAKE FARM, HOME SAFE FROM HAZARDS

Elimination of hazards to the safety of farm families is being stressed in Iowa's observance of National Farm Safety Week.

Leaders in the field of farm safety around the state are talking up the community and home aspects of safety. Norval Wardle, extension safety specialist at Iowa State College, summed up their thinking when he pointed out that there is too much erroneous thinking that farm safety is only work safety. It's more than that and involves all of the activities of farm families.

Remove Hazards

In order to accomplish safe working and living conditions in farm communities, Wardle believes that people must work at the job and actually remove specific hazards. Just "being careful" won't do it. In fact, he says that the best safe practice to follow is to remove hazards. Therefore, he recommends that farm families actually remove some specific hazards during the week.

In the home it might be anchoring down rugs to prevent falls, repairing broken steps on porches or stairs, or improving the lighting of stairways. A rather common hazard found in homes is the wrong size fuse in an electric circuit, or burned out fuses shorted with a coin or wire.

Check Electrical Connections

Example of other specific things to do in the home include providing a special place for sharp knives in the kitchen and checking electrical connections in the bathroom and utility room. Wardle says that it should be impossible for a person to touch a pull chain or a turn-type switch when bathing or working in water.

Many hazards can be found and removed around the farm yard. Putting up guard rails around haychutes, repairing unsafe ladders, removing trash, tools and other objects from walkways in buildings, and putting guards around water tanks so they aren't accessible to small children are examples. Putting guards around unprotected power shafts, belts and chains or putting fenders on tractors fight be some specific things to do around machinery.

Return From Vacation Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Beier and Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Kropp returned home Monday from a two weeks vacation trip of 3,000 miles. They drove through the Bad Lands and the Black Hills and out to the Big Horn Mountains over an 8,000 foot pass. They then drove to the Yellowstone Park for a few days. At Lingle, Wyoming they visited at the Gordon Sherman and Mamie White home for 3 days. They saw many places of interest along the route and enjoyed the beautiful scenery.

START BATTLE NOW FOR WEEDS OF '52

Plowing Stubble Early Always Good Practice

Iowa farmers can take a punch at next year's weed's by going after them in stubble fields now.

Early fall plowing of oat stubble, for erample, is one of the best ways to reduce weed problems next summer, according to E. P. Sylwester, extension specialist at Iowa State College. Early plowing depletes the root reserves of such perennials as sow thistle, quack grass, bindweed and Canada thistle. This weakens the weed and slows up its development next spring. Annual weeds are kept from going to seed by early plowing. So both annual and perennial weeds can be curbed by early plowing after harvest.

Regrowth Food

Bad perennials may grow up again after plowing, but this actually is a blessing in disguise, Slywester says. The regrowth shows you just where the weeds are so that you can concentrate on them. The regrowth may be plowed again or sprayed with 2,4-D. Every time regrowth is stopped, the perennial weed's system is weakened further.

Early plowing followed by fallowing is one of the best programs to use against persistent perennials such as Canada thistle. Broadleaved weeds, including such serious pests as ragweed and wild morning glory, can be given a severe setback this fall by spraying alone.

Watch 2,4-D Use

The grass-type weeds, such as barnyard grass and foxtail, aren't affected by 2,4-D. For spraying stubble, Sylwester says to use 2 pounds of actual 2,4-D per acre. Use either the ester or amine form, but the ester will penetrate "hardened off" weeds better.

Sylwester has one caution for farmers planning to spray stubble fields. Legumes are likely to be damaged by 2,4-D. It's a matter of which is most important — getting rid of the weeds or keeping the legume stand. If you have perennial weeds, better spray them because that will weaken them in preparation for next year's control program.

Ocelot?

Earl Penne, LaPorte City farmer, shot and killed a wild animal recently which is believed to have been an ocelot. The big cat was about 30 inches long from nose to tail and weighed 15 to 18 pounds. No one knows how an ocelot, normally a tropical animal, arrived Iowa.

ROSE SEED

Again this year the State Conservation Commission will provide free multiflora rose seed to Iowans wishing to grow their own rose plants. Seed will be mailed upon request about Sept. 15 in packets of 1000 seeds, each with complete planting instruction for late fall planting.

The seeds should be planted this fall shortly before the ground freezes. They may be planted in a vegetable garden plot and next year will demand the same care during the seedling stage as carrots or onions When the plants are a year old they may be transplanted to their permanent location. Normally, the seeds have about a 60 per cent germination, one packet being enough for 60 plants or 600 feet of living fence. Because of heavy demand, the Commission has limited the requests to not more than 5 seed packets.

The rose, in addition to making an inexpensive fence, is heralded as a great boom to Iowa's wildlife. The thorny shrub which grows to a maximum height and width of 8 feet and is no-spreading, provides excellent refuge in nesting places for game and song birds, as well as small animals.

In addtion to its use as a living fence and for wildlife cover, multiflora rose hedge is excellent for wind erosion control.

Requests for free multiflora rose seed should be addressed to the State Conservation Commission, East 7th and Court Avenue, Des Moines, and should be in Commission hands by September 15th.

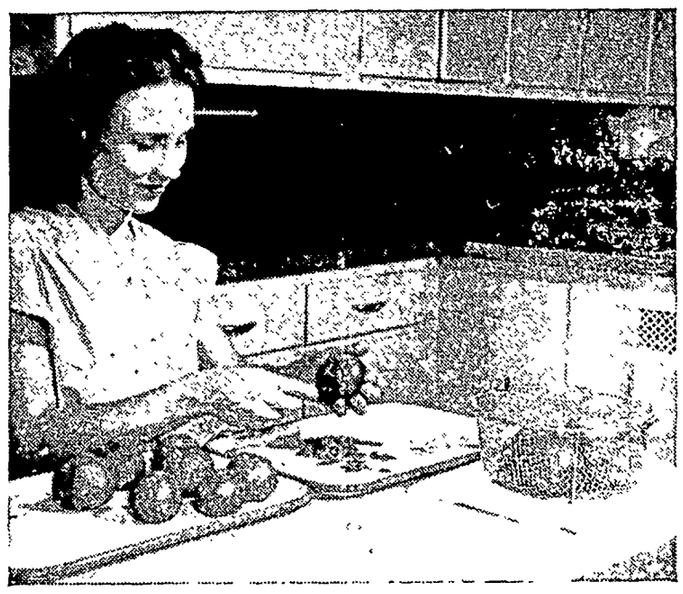
For Good Eating The Year Round—

CAN TOMATOES IN MANY WAYS



Tomato time in your garden is almost here. Plan to eat fresh red-ripe tomatoes for the rest of the summer and can a big supply for good eating later on. You can put them on whole, quartered and stewed; as catsup, chilli sauce, puree, juice, pickles preserves and mincemeat.

Clear around the calendar, the tomatoes from your garden can add their special not of bright color, good flavor and nourishment. Fresh or canned, thoy're a rich source of vitamin C.

Tomatoes may be ianne whole or cut up. They can be packed hot or raw—Nelle Thompson, nutritionist at Iowa State College, says you can expect good results either way. Tomatoes packed raw and then processed will hold their color and shape better than those that are precooked before you pack them into the jars for processing. You'll be able to get more tomatoes into each jar by the hot-pack method, however.

If your family are great tomato eaters and you have a big crop, plan on putting up about 30 quarts per person. And don't forget how many ways there are to preserve versatile tomatoes.

Tomato Juice

Select fully ripe tofatoes, sort and wash. Don't use any tomatoes with bad spots even if you cut them out, for you might spoil the whole batch. Work in small lots. Remove stem ends and any green or yellow portions. Quarter, and place them in a kettle. Cover and let them simmer gently until soft.

Next, put them through a strainer or fine colander quickly. Reheat the juice and fill clean hot jars to the top with boiling hot juice. Add 1 teaspoonful to a quart of juice Wipe the top of the jar and adjust the lid according to the type of closure used. Process immediately in a boiling-water bath—15 minutes for both pints and quarts.

Remove the jars, complete the seal if necessary, and cool.

Tomato Puree or Paste

Canned tomato puree comes in handy for soups, ebans, casseroles and many Italian dishes. Start the preparation the same as for juice. Then, when you strain the tomatoes through a fine strainer or colander, separate the first thin juice that runs through the strainer from the later, thicker portion. Boil the thin portion of the juice in a shallow, open kettle until it reaches about half of its volume. Then add the thick portion of the juice and continue to boil until the desired thickness is reached.

Fill hot, sterilized jars to the top with oiling-hot pulp. Add ½ a teaspoon of salt to a pint. Adjust the lids according to the type of closure used. You'll probably want to use pint rather than quart jars. Process immediately in a boiling-water bath for 10 minutes. Remove the jars, complete the seal if necessary, and set to cool.

Tomato Preserves

This calls for 4 cups of quartered yellow or red tomatoes, fully ripe and firm; ¼ a cup of lemon juice and 3 cups of sugar.

Peel tomatoes and remove hard stem ends. Remove seeds by slitting the sides of the tomatoes and squeezing them gently. Quarter, add lemon juice and cook until thick. Next, add sugar and cook the mixture until thick, stirring constantly to keep it from sticking. Cooking time will depend on the amount of juice in the tomatoes. Pour the preserves into hot, sterile jars and seal.

DEADLINE NOV. 1ST FOR LEASE NOTICE

Bill For Changing Law To September 1st Failed

There's confusion among many Iowa farmers as to the legal date on which notice must be given to terminate farm leases I. W. Arthur, agricultural economost at Iowa State College, says this confusion is a result of a recent bill introduced into the last session of the Iowa legislature

This bill asked that the date for filing the notice of termination be changed from Nov 1, to September 1. But the bill did not pass Therefore the original Nov 1 deadline still stands as the legal date for serving the notices.

If no written notice of lease termination is served on the second party by this date, the lease is automatically renewed for a second year, Arthur says This means all provisions of the original lease are carried over into the second year If, on the other hand, the termination notice is served before the Nov 1 deadline, the present contract ends on the following March 1st

Delivery Three Ways

The lease can be canceled after Nov 1, but only with the consent of both parties involved. The termination law applies only where one party wishes to terminate the lease and the other objects

The notice of termination can be delivered by 3 methods, Arthur says. If it is delivered in person, the other party must sign the notice also, and the notice must be served on or before Nov. 1 By the second method a representative of one of the two parties serves the notice in much the same manner that a law suit is served The third method is by registered mail The notice must be sent 10 days before the deadline to the last known address of the second party, and a return receipt card should be demanded.

Four Renewal Exceptions

Under the state law the automatic renewal of farm leases doesn't apply in cases of share croppers, field rented farms, or any other tenancy under 40 acres. It also fails to apply when either party violates an important provision of the lease

As a general rule, oral leases are recognized by Iowa law for only 1 year But Arthur says if the written notice of termination isn't given, the oral lease carries over except in the four instances mentioned above.

Field renting arrangements expire when the crop is harvested. If the crop is corn, the field renting arrangement terminates not later than Dec 1, unless both parties agree otherwise

Arthur says if the tenant occupies and cultivates less than 40 acres, either party may terminate the arrangement on March 1, by giving the second party a 30-day notice This is true unless other arrangements for a termination date were agreed upon in the contract.

Cave-In

A cave-in cost the life of Dick Mount of Jefferson recently, in an accident near Glidden. He was working in a drainage ditch when the walls collapsed and was dead when fellow workmen cleared the dirt away a few second later.

HOME TOWN NEWS

Army to Establish News Center For Releases to Local Papers

The people in the home towns of the nation are going to hear more about local soldiers in the army.

The army recently announced the establishment of a central news processing center in Kansas City, Mo. The primary purpose of the center will be to obtain recognition in his home town newspaper for each soldier who merits it. The center will provide more news about local men in the army and relieve combat trained soldier of a big volume of writing and typing.

The army central news processing center will collect home town items through direct contact with army camps and units in the field, prepare them for publication and release them to local newspapers throughout the country in a single package—while they are still fresh.

The army's decision to create the agency after a study disclosed that publication of such stories in home town newspapers not only served to keep the people in the home towns informed but also had a tremendous effect on the soldiers themselves. They want credit for themselves and their units when they feel they deserve it.

Newspaper editors long have been aware of the demand by their readers for news about local men in the army and have spared no effort in gathering this information. But no newspaper—even with its own reporters working in the field with the troops—is able to give complete coverage without assistance from the army.

The major press associations, which have done a splendid job of keeping the public informed by supplying newspapers with national and state aspects of the army's campaigns and build-up, are unable to move a large volume of purely local news because of lack of wire space. Stories of outstanding heroism and achievement by individual soldiers have received excellent coverage through the press associations.

But to a newspaper editor in Helena, Ark., the story of a Helena soldier's promotion to a sergeant or his winning of the Bronze Star medal is of far more importance to a Helena newspaper and its readers than a lengthy story of a Boston or Seattle infantryman who won the Congressional Medal of Honor or of a five-mile advance by an army in the field. However, none of the wire services has the facilities to send to the newspapers concerned the myriad "small" items of this type.

The army has few public information men in units smaller than a division, and even at division level the public information staff is limited It is the primary job of the small staff at this level to see that major news is covered. Consequently, "little" news items that would be of great importance in towns throughout the nation often are passed up.

The army has appointed Major Walter A. Pennino, former Boston Globe writer and far east Command news chief in Tokyo until last year, to command the army central news processing center. He has just been relieved of assignment with the army's office of information in Washington to organize and operate the center. A small but competent staff has already been chosen for the job.

The army expects to release approximately 1,000,000 home town stories annually when full operations get underway.

Judge Levies Overtime Fine On Railway, Promises More

RICHMOND, Calif. — Parking tickets are always a problem. And if you think your jalopy is a special target for overtime tags—consider the case of the city that fined a railroad engineer.

A Richmond city ordinance says trains must not block a grade crossing for more than five minutes.

Police Judge Clare Horner said Southern Pacific trains violated that rule eight times and fined the company $80, with a strong warning:

"Next time you're in for sterner judgment."

Star Dust
STAGE-SCREEN-RADIO

By INEZ GERHARD

ANNA MARIA ALBERGHETTI, the 14-year-old Italian soprano, is in Hollywood for her first starring role; she will play a refugee in "The Goddess" at Paramount. She was so good in "Here Comes the Groom", with Bing Crosby, that the studio signed her again. But the picture which will really establish her as a sensation is "The Medium"

ANNE MARIA ALBERGHETTI

Made in Italy, it was directed by Menotti, author of the operetta which ran so successfully in New York and abroad. It is one of those unforgettable films, perfectly acted and sung, beautifully staged. It stars Marie Powers, as did the original production. And the little Alberghetti is marvelous in it.

"Out of This World", the book by Lowell Thomas, Jr., about the exciting adventures of his famous father, the CBS newscaster, and himself in Tibet, is now being made into a feature movie in Hollywood, for release this fall.

There was a good deal of grumbling by jealous competitors when Arthur Godfrey was asked to hobnob with the great on that recent European trip, but his remarks on the European situation, made since his return, have proved how worthy he was of that honor Godfrey probably has the largest and most devoted audience of any radio or television star in the country.

THE FICTION CORNER

THE LONG WAY HOME

By Beatrice Cargill

LONG AFTER the 12:07 had moved out of sight around Black Mountain, two figures stood motionless on the tiny platform. Above them, creaking on its hinges, the sign read "Turner Junction." Wind swirled and eddied around them harshly Jeb Reynolds, station master, stayed discreetly inside the ticket office. He had watched folks for twenty years as they experienced that first aloneness.

3-Minute Fiction

The train had paused for only a minute. Then, with Rob Cameron waving and smiling on the rear platform, it had made its noisy departure.

"Must be nearly down the valley to Ellentown by now," John said.

Sara clutched the shiny black leather purse tighter. It was Rob's last gift.

"Feels like snow in the air, Mother." John's gray head bent to hers.

"Turkey weather."

"Yes, Thanksgiving's almost here again."

Sara looked deep into his eyes. "John, he'll be gone for a long time."

"Yes, Sara."

Jeb Reynolds came out on the platform and watched them climb into the old blue sedan. The old car woke up and cleared its throat.

"Need some anti-freeze, I do." John pulled out the choke.

"Maybe a little coffee might help." Sara smiled, but it was only her lips that moved.

They drove seven miles past

"Must be down the valley to Ellentown by now," John said.

browned and crisped meadows.

John slowed down near a white, low farmhouse. There was a small sign on the side of an elm tree—"Mrs. Whitely's Famous Dinners."

Sara nodded in reply to his unasked question. She straightened her hat in the rear view mirror and put on her gloves, taking a long time with each finger. Rob's train must be nearly to Coddington.

THERE WERE long, silent minutes between soup and chicken and dessert. After dinner, they went out behind the barn to see the minks, kept in orderly cages Mrs. Whitely's boy fished in the pond for sunfish to feed them. Sara bent over to see the tiny creatures and her hair played in the wind. The gray streaks were like a light touch of snow.

She counted the minks Two large ones, one small one, screened off by himself. A family? Their family had been three—John, Rob, Sara.

"Yes, they are beautiful," she said, "I wish I could look at them without thinking of the coats they are going to make." She smiled, apologetically. "It seems wicked, to kill them, I mean."

Mrs. Whitely grinned. "Well, Mrs. Cameron, I used to feel sorry for them, but after the first check came in, I never thought about it again."

The train must be at Gorge City now. Another hour and he'd be there. She closed her eyes.

John's arm was around her.

"I feel as if I'd been running," she murmured. "Guess I leaned over too long looking at the minks."

They settled themselves in the old car again. They could see the farm on a distant hill.

"I still love it, John. I still like coming around that curve and seeing it, knowing it'll be there."

The car whined in self-pity as it climbed the hill. John drove up to the front door. He fumbled for the key and then just held it in his hand. Something seemed to hold him back. He didn't want to go into the house. He leaned down to pat the old collie who stood waiting there—and saw the note. Pinned to the dog's collar was a scrap of paper. Together John and Sara read it, incredulous. Drawn in the quick scrawl of a boy in a hurry were Mom and Dad—woeful faces above single-line bodies. Mom was clutching the black purse, Dad his keys. Beneath the picture Rob had written in large black letters,

'CHEER UP—YOU SURE LOOK GLOOMY'

"John, you sure look gloomy," Sara repeated—and John began to grin. Sara laughed.

"That boy," he said, "That crazy kid."

He opened the door and they went into their house.

MIRROR Of Your MIND

Cry-Babies And Self Pity

By Lawrence Gould

Do crying spells express self-pity?

Answer: Self-pity is generally involved, but there may be another more or less unconscious factor, namely, pent-up rage—the feeling, mixed with fear, which primarily provokes a baby's crying Anyone who is addicted to periodic crying spells is probably nursing a deep-rooted grudge against someone toward whom he or she does not dare act, or perhaps even feel resentful, and expresses his or her rage in the reproach which the crying implies. The first step in dealing with a woman who has crying spells might well be to search for the grievances which she is cherishing against her husband.

Does suffering make you "strong"?

Answer: Not always, by any means; its effect upon the average person is more often to frighten or embitter him. A child who grew up without experience of pain or frustration would probably be incapable of dealing with the hard knocks of adult life just as one who had never been exposed to "germs" might die of the first infection he encountered. But developing immunity to measles does not leave a child in better health than if he never had had the disease. Nor does learning to endure harsh treatment from his parents make a child more "secure" than he would have been if they had been kind to him.

Are you sure that your child hears well?

Answer: If you are, you are in the superior minority of parents. According to Drs. William G. Hardy and Miriam D. Pauls of Johns Hopkins University, five per cent of children in the United States have more or less impaired hearing, which in many cases could be cured or improved by early treatment. Yet only eleven per cent of school children have their hearing tested regularly. It is all too easy to assume that a child who is slightly deaf is stupid or "not paying attention," especially since there is nothing visibly wrong with him. If your child's school does not provide hearing tests, see that he gets them elsewhere.

Allergy May Cause Headache

By Dr. James W. Barton

AS YOUNGSTERS, a test of strength was to hold one arm up sideways, in line with the shoulder, elbow straight, and see how long we could hold it there. When the large muscle on top of the shoulder got too painful and tired to hold the arm out any longer, we dropped the arm. The boy who could hold out the longest was the winner.

I think of this boyhood test when I see so many men and women suffering with pain in the back of the neck, because this pain is often caused by holding the head in one position for long periods of time at work, or simply sitting carelessly in a chair. Sometimes this careless attitude allows pressure from neck bones of the spine to press on nerves coming out from the spinal cord and cause pain in neck, shoulder and sometimes down the arm.

That our old enemy, allergy, may be a cause of pain in the back of the neck, and also headache, is pointed out in Archives of Otolaryngology (ear and throat) by Dr. Theron G. Randolph (Northwestern University) Dr. Randolph states that headache and neckache are repeatedly seen after the eating of certain foods or inhaling house dust. The headache and neckache disappear when these foods and house dust are avoided.

That headache and neckache are not the only signs of allergy in these individuals is evident from the fact that such signs as attacks of sneezing, running nose, cramps in abdomen and diarrhea, nausea, dizziness and hives are usually present. Other muscle groups affected, besides those in the neck, are those of the legs, back, chest, and abdomen.

In previous articles this pain in the muscles of the neck has been holding the head in the one position tenses the muscles and nerves, but Dr. Randolph thinks it results from allergic fatigue.

Let's Not Fool Americans With False Propaganda

By Wright A. Patterson

WE MAY NOT resent foreign nations being fed false information by the state department, as Secretary Acheson testified was the case, when on the witness stand before the senate committee investigating the firing of MacArthur. But we do resent, and quite justifiably, paying taxes to the extent of many millions of dollars to be spent by governmental departments in attempting to influence our opinions on Fair Deal socialistic projects.

Many thousands—something like 30,000—highly paid propaganda specialists are employed to promote health insurance (socialized medicine), universal military training, the Brannan food plan, and other things on which congress has turned thumbs down.

Through handouts to the press and radio and through thousands of speakers, these publicity experts dish out for our benefit, and at our expense, definitely false and misleading statements regarding these nefarious Fair Deal schemes.

For example: They tell us the government-sponsored legislation to provide for health insurance (socialized medicine) will cover all the costs of all our occulist and dental bills, our hospital, medicine and doctor bills, with our regular family physician to attend to the needs of each of us, and at a cost that if far less than we are now paying for covering our ills and misfortunes.

The facts and figures they give us for the money we pay are false and misleading. They are definitely lies, but the authors are not asked or expected to prove them.

In addition to the press and radio handouts, consisting of many thousands of words each week, these specialists prepare hundreds of speeches, equally as unreliable and misleading as are the press and radio releases. Those speeches are delivered to any audience that will listen.

The orators who deliver them are drawn from that army of bureaucrats to be found in each division of the federal government, including social security, agriculture, interior, national defense, justice and others, all of them paid out of taxes of us Americans, and each of them paid far more than they could earn on any other job they could get.

These bureaucrats selected for the purpose seek the opportunity to talk to service clubs, farmers and women's organizations, church societies. Special speeches to fit audiences of all classes and types, are prepared by the publicity experts, and we pay both those who write the speeches and those who deliver them to the extent of many millions of dollars each year.

And who is responsible for such expenditure of the American tax payers money? The answer to that question is, congress. It is congress that levies the taxes we must pay, and then appropriates the money for such expenditures as it approves. Among those receiving congressional approval are these propaganda experts, some 30,000 of them, who are employed for the purpose of selling us the socialistic schemes of the Fair Deal, that we may join in the demand for legislation that would effectuate such schemes.

Leave them on the job long enough and they will accomplish the purpose for which they are employed. When that happens, we will have followed the Pied Piper of the Fair Deal into the morass of socialism, or worse, from which it will take us generations to climb back to the safe ground of free enterprise and freedom. Congress could stop it if congress would, and we, the tax paying Americans pick the men who represent us in the senate and house of representatives at Washington.

For a period of 150 years, succeeding generations have enjoyed the opportunities and freedom that began with the birth of our country As a people, we prospered, and individually, those who were industrious and thrifty, accumulated beyond those of any other nation due to our capitalistic system. We had many ups and downs, but more ups than downs. Now the leadership we have would change that system to a socialistic economy that has never succeeded.

The government employs some 26,000 chauffeurs, besides providing the cars they use in driving bureaucratic clerks and straw bosses in government jobs. It costs the tax payers many millions.

C., Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston declares emphatically that the house of representatives in its action on controls legislation this far has kicked the American people in the teeth and in the pocketbook, as well as the stomach. KATHLEEN NORRIS
The 'Change'

THERE IS no bugaboo more potent in destroying the happiness and security of a woman's life than the fear of what is called "the change."

The "change" is that time when she feels, with the passing of youth, the loss of a good many other things as well. She has been married an unromantic number of years; 18 or 23 or 27 as the case may be. No more 'reams of what her life may be are coming her way; she has got what she is going to get, in looks, money, husband, home, children. There aren't going to be any more.

Very often she has enough of worldly goods. But it isn't enough. Rooms full of furniture, of which she is tired, of china and beds and towels she knows by heart. She has dusted and polished and washed them all for years.

A good husband—Dan. But by this time whenever she speaks to him she knows exactly what he is going to answer, if he answers at all. Sometimes when a man is comfortable with his work, his home, his family, his wife, he only needs monosyllables.

It isn't that he doesn't love them, but—well, the surprises and expectations are over for him, too. He's pleased with a good dinner—there isn't a better cook in Madison county than Minnie. He's proud of his children—the boy isn't going to set the river afire, but he's smart enough. And the girl has married a fine fellow, and there'll be grandchildren someday. So Dad's evening conversation is comprised in a "got any more gravy there, Mom?" and, "O.K., son, be back at eleven," and "had the radio fixed did you, Min? Fine."

". . . married a fine fellow . . ."

And this is not enough to satisfy Min She's a plain woman now, who was once so pretty Her clothes no longer excite her. Cooking has lost its excitements, except when there's company. She likes occasional radio music, she likes to plan for a trip, she likes certain visitors and she doesn't get much of any of this.

So she falls into languor and blues, life loses its taste, and she convinces herself that she is going through that experience that all women have been taught to fear and dread.

Men go through the same painful emotions when youth and dreams are over, and this is the moment when any flattering young woman can get hold of them. This is the time they tell the blonde office clerk that they are misunderstood at home. But Min has no such consolations.

A Tennessee 44-year-old woman wrote me: "I am frightened by a growing mental listlessness. I can't force myself to write a letter, read a book, concentrate on anything. I used to take hikes, do a lot on our little farm, put up fruit. But now one son is married and far away, and the other stays with his grandmother in town all week, and some week ends for schooling. I've gotten rid of the chickens, I dread company, dread any effort. It's not menopause, no sign of that yet. My husband is a good, but a quiet man; we live well inside our income. Am I going mad in spite of myself?"

This woman, like many others, thinks that this uncomfortable thing is all physical. It isn't. That's why so much of it can be lessened or obliterated entirely. It merely means, here, that her old activities, her proud usefulness and importance in her own home, with the beauty and gaiety and ignorance and confidence of youth, are gone.

But happiness, health, service, interest in life, energetic welcome of each successive morning, thankfulness for deep sweet sleep at night, these are all ahead.

To the woman who wrote me the letter quoted above I sent the suggestion that she get in touch with her county authorities and take in a couple of small homeless children, to board. Her house never has had girls in it; they are great company. They'll give her a new interest, they'll bring new life into the house.

To be needed, to find new duties, to be active once more, these for a woman's hungry heart are all curative measures. But best of all is the power to give pleasure, to make other persons happy. Two little girls can find Paradise on a small farm. The housekeeping that can go on in a corner between the chicken-yard fence and the low-branched oak is as soul-filling to Seven and Nine as anything that ever went on in Buckingham Palace. The sight of two small girls in clean ginghams, busily dressing their dolls, makes a home.

Rice Wrestles Boxing Division

By GRANTLAND RICE

STEPPING into the heavyweight picture we have the feeling that we've just invaded a squirrel cage or stuck our features into a revolving fan.

Just what is the heavyweight division, anyway? Walcott whips Louis but doesn't get the decision. Then Louis knocks out Walcott. Ezzard Charles gives Louis a bad trimming. Ezzard Charles then gives Walcott two unhappy evenings by knocking Jersey Joe around.

Then along comes Rex Layne and whips Walcott, making it practically unanimous. For Jersey Joe is now close to 38 years old, possibly older, and he has been beaten four times in a row.

Grantland Rice

In the midst of this turmoil and confusion Rocky Marciano knocks out Rex Layne, late conqueror of Walcott. Then the aging Walcott knocks out Ezzard Charles

If you can make anything out of this pretzel-shaped situation, you have considerable on us. Louis, Walcott, Charles, Marciano and Layne are all in the jumble Three of these have given Jersey Joe a healthy powdering—Louis, Charles and Layne.

On a matter of percentages Ezzard Charles is still ahead But Jersey Joe Walcott is the heavyweight champion of the world He not only holds a knockout over Charles but he beat him six out of seven rounds by outboxing and outfighting him.

On top of this scrambled heavyweight situation we have Robinson and Turpin moving into the scenery shortly. Jim Norris admits that Madison Square Garden can't handle over two big fights in one month. This leaves a flock of heavyweights on the outside looking in.

Having won two out of three matches from Walcott, Charles deserves his return bout But Louis has been training for another shot at Charles for over a year. And Marciano, backed by Al Weill, says he won't meet anyone but the champion

If Walcott and Charles meet, a Louis-Marciano contest would be highly important, as well as interesting, since both Louis and Marciano can hit with the impact of a brick at close enough range.

It would be more than interesting to see Marciano piling into Joe Louis as he piled into Rex Layne.

No Big Stars

The heavyweight situation today is the most highly involved in many, many years.

It is now evident that with a 38-year-old fighter—one who had lost his last four important matches to Louis, Charles and Layne—the new world's champion, the quality of this rickety division isn't any Mt. Everest peak. It has to be pretty low. But as long as it is now a big four-cornered matter among old rivals, it has at least taken on a keener degree of national interest than anything we have seen since Gene Tunney and Jack Dempsey left us, over 20 years ago.

For example, most of the old-time boxers that I talked to after the Marciano-Layne fight were confident Charles could take both Walcott and Marciano.

As it developed Charles couldn't take Walcott alone in his third stab, and Marciano's status, he man who wrecked Layne who beat Walcott who knocked out Charles, is still a mystery. Where does this lead us? We are deeper in the underbrush than we were at the start of the argument.

If the Past Performance Chart means anything at all the four men left are about as evenly matched as one could hope to find

Rex Layne is still two years away, waiting for the day when he can discover what a left hand means. Rocky Marciano might be in the same fix regarding experience, of which he has had little in high-class boxing society.

Ezzard Charles was regarded as a good, careful boxer who couldn't punch. Against Walcott he looked to be in a half daze. He made very little active effort to defend his slipping crown. He must have seen that said crown was skidding rapidly and yet he still wouldn't make a threatening gesture. It was a sad performance on the part of a defending champion But there was nothing sad about the way Walcott finally won the big title.

Looking Ahead

The American League dominance in baseball will never return again by any heavy margin—not while most of us are inhaling the thin breath of life. I mean by that the A L. won't again have a Ruth, Gehrig, Foxx and Greenberg operating its salvos.

These four hit more than 2,000 homers, if our memory is intact. Babe Ruth had around 714, Lou Gehrig—494, Foxx—534 and Greenberg had 331.

But those big days are over. Joe DiMaggio has been another American League star along the power road. Joe had 349 homers when the 1951 season opened. So he must also be remembered on the power side of his league in the days when roaring bats drove the National League into submission.

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded businesses and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

Late summer vacation trips, travel to fairs, the Labor Day holiday, the back-to-school period, and the normal autumn increase in business travel combine to make the next few weeks one of the most hazardous driving periods during the year in Iowa

Your Iowa Safety Congress urges motorists to avoid accidents by "defensive driving"

If you see a car approaching a stop intersection too rapidly, be ready to give it the right of way If children are playing along the street, be ready for a quick stop if one dashes in front of your car. If a parked car gives signs of pulling out into traffic, slow down, the driver may not see you

The wise driver is never taken by surprise He sizes up traffic conditions as far ahead as he can see and is ready for any emergency by the time his car reaches the "danger spot."

You can't always see ahead like the long-necked driver in this week's "Safety Sake" poster, but you can think ahead and be ready for "trouble in the making."

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

George didn't care for the small Iowa town. He made a joke of it when he had to tell strangers where he lived. "Take the dirt road about a mile and a half past civilization and turn left," he'd say.

It never occured to George that he had no reason to resent the town. But what always occurred to him was that he was wasted in the small place. Its people didn't understand his real ability and worth, he did not realize his grasp of problems and solutions. And that made George resentful.

He showed his resentment in various childish ways, scoffing at civic meetings, shaking his head at all local events, and driving around town as though it were his private property.

For in driving, George found the most dramatic outlet for his contempt. When he roared down main street or burned his tires around the courthouse corners, he felt he was expressing his superiority to the place and all its people.

When he was arrested for speeding, he tried to turn the whole thing into a joke by offering the clerk a dollar tip when he paid his fine.

Not that George had a very deep sense of humor. It didn't show at all, for example, the day he swung to far out and too fast to make a downtown turn and popped up over the curb into a light pole.

His only injury was a broken nose, but George was a finished man in the town. He sat in the car, bleeding down his shirt front, and refused to get out until everyone went away. He glared at the people who stood looking at him and cursed those who tried to help him.

George and his warped sense of value left town shortly after, Nobody regreted his going. He was a man who tried to express his superiority by the reckless driving of an automobile. He only proved that he was inferior to the machine and most of his neighbors. He coudn't live in the town after the truth became obvious.

HOT, HUMID WEATHER HAS BOOSTED PROSPECTS OF CORN CROP HERE

With some hot, humid weather over the week end an continuing through the first of this week has been a definite improvement in the prospects of a corn and soy bean crop in this area.

After a week of rather cold weather, the hot days and nights were a real tonic for the corn and beans, which are behind normal growth in North Iowa.

Corn in the southern and southwest parts of the state looks very good at this time With plenty of more farm days and nights, North Iowa will have a fair to good corn crop.

Here Chick !

ONE ROOSTER CONSPICIOUS BY HIS ABSENCE

The Editor and wife had gone into the country on Saturday morning to get 10 nice big white fries to put in the locker and everything went fine until we stopped at Bell's Produce Store to weigh the coop of chickens. As the crate was being lifted out of the car, the bottom dropped out and 4 chickens took off for the next township!

Fred Bell chased one, Mary Jane another, Fred's dog a third and the Editor took after the fourth chicken. Fred, Mary Jane and the dog scored perfect, but the chicken assigned to us had other ideas about being captured. The last we saw of the white rooster he was in the general vicinity of the Harvey Barz garden.

Now, it is a strange coincident that the Barz family had a chicken dinner that evening!

The white rooster is still on the missing in action list.

One World

Lesson for September 2, 1951

HOW rare it is to think of persons simply as persons, without any tags or labels! We think "policeman" or "lawyer" or "soldier" or "farmer" or "Japanese" before we think "man." One of the commonest tags we use is the race-tag. So-and-so is a Negro or an Italian or a Pole or a Mexican or a Scotchman, — at least that is the way he looks to us, even before he is Dan or Tony or Steve or whatever his name is.

Dr Foreman

We say off-hand, "All Negroes are like that" or "All Mexicans are that way" and we don't often take the trouble to see whether a particular Negro or Mexican is really "like that" or not. But from the Christian point of view, the first and most important fact about any person is that he is a person and not a thing.

A Lower Race

THE story of Jesus and the Samaritan woman shows how Jesus treated a person of a "lower" race than his. We needn't argue the question whether the Samaritans were actually beneath the Jews. In any case, the Jews treated the Samaritans like dirt.

On top of all that, the particular woman with whom Jesus talked at Jacob's well was poor and with no good reputation even among her own people. The disciples were surprised that Jesus talked with her at all. But as we read the story, it is clear that while Jesus "spoke of her condition" as the old expression is, he was dealing with her all the time as a particular human being, not merely as "a Samaritan."

Evidently, to be sure, she was greatly inferior to Jesus, and admitted as much herself; yet this fact did not raise a barrier between them.

A Dominant Race

WE often talk of "race prejudice" as if it were prejudice of top-dog against under-dog. But prejudice runs in both directions Of course all race prejudice includes a strain of contempt; but a citizen of a conquered nation may despise his conquerors, the weak may despise the strong quite as easily as the other way around.

In the Bible we have an excellent example of a Christian coming into contact with a dominant, that is, a conquering, race: the story of St. Peter and the Roman officer Cornelius

Peter at first did not want to have anything to do with Cornelius. God had to shake him into it, so to speak. But once Peter saw the point, he saw it plainly: God made no difference between Cornelius and Peter's own people, the Jews.

It was not for Peter to call any man, even an officer of the foreign army that occupied his little nation and held the Jews severely down, common or unclean.

Which is harder: for a Jew to treat a Samaritan like a human being, or to treat a Roman the same way? Which is harder, for a white man to treat a Negro like a human being, or for a Negro to treat a white man like one? It may be hard either way, but it is Christian.

"In Christ There Is No East or West"

AN old Scotch elder tells this story. "My church had invited the youth fellowship of all the denominations in the state to meet in our church, and the officers of our church were to serve the communion on the last afternoon. It had never occurred to me that some of the delegates would be Negroes, but when I stood up to pass the bread and wine, there sat some Negro young people right beside the white ones.

For a minute I thought I couldn't do it. In forty years as an elder in the church, I had never passed the communion plate to any but white persons. But then I thought, after all I am not passing the bread and wine to Negroes and white people, but only to Christians. So I went ahead with it and I never felt such a blessing as I had that afternoon."

The elder had discovered that what Paul wrote is true: in the "new creature" in Christ there is neither Greek nor Jew, slave nor free man; that in Christ's presence the stone walls that divide the human race melt like snow.

FOLKS HAVE TO FEEL WELL TO DO A GOOD DAY'S WORK

HADACOL Helps Folks Troubled With Poor Appetite, Tired-Out Feeling and Sleeplessness Caused by an Upset Stomach, If Due to Lack of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron in System

Bert Baldwin, Jr.

Too many folks put off doing something for themselves when they don't feel as good as they should. But when they don't feel up to doing their work the situation demands immediate action. Bert Baldwin, Jr., 1838 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, California, works in a rope factory and for a time he had been feeling tired, didn't sleep well at night and had no appetite. He heard how HADACOL could help folks with conditions like these when due to lack of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron in the system and began taking it. Now he says he feels like working every day. Here is his statement:

"I have tried HADACOL, and it helped me in many ways. Before I took HADACOL I was tired and I did not feel like working and I could not sleep well at night. I did not have a good appetite. I have told my friends what HADACOL has done for me. I feel like working every day since I am taking HADACOL."

Serve a Salad for a Satisfying Supper
(See Recipes Below)

Summertime Salads

PLEASANT SUMMER DAYS are numbered just about this time, and you want to make the most of them. Quickly, easily made salads that are appealing and substantial enough to satisfy appetites will give you the time to stay out-of-doors longer and enjoy yourself.

Salads which can be made ahead and which require thorough chilling are the ideal dish to serve for supper or for lunch. They give you an opportunity to use garden produce as well as to supply the essential health-giving vitamins and minerals.

Here are salad recipes designed to save you time to stay away from the kitchen, except for the briefest preparation, and to give you time for sunning, garden activities or just plain loafing.

Vienna'd Macaroni Salad

- 1 8-ounce package macaroni, cooked and drained
- 1 cup chopped celery
- 1 cup chopped sweet pickles
- 2 tablespoons grated onion
- 2 cans Vienna sausage, chilled
- 1 cup mayonnaise or salad dressing
- 2 tablespoons juice from pickles
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper

Combine macaroni with celery, pickles, onion and 1 can sausages, cut in thin slices. Blend in mayonnaise, pickle juice and seasonings. Add to macaroni mixture. Chill thoroughly. Arrange on salad greens and spoke remaining sausage around the top of the salad. Halves of deviled eggs may be arranged around the salad, if desired.

HERE'S A HEARTY salad which will win approval from the men folk if you serve it for supper on a sizzling summer evening:

 Sardine Salad Bowls
(Serves 4)

- Romaine or other salad greens
- 2 3¼-ounce cans large sardines, chilled
- 4 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
- 8 sticks sharp cheese
- Carrot strips
- Celery sticks
- Peppy dressing
- Rye bread toast

Cut enough salad greens to fill bottom of salad bowls. Arrange sardines, hard-cooked eggs, cheese sticks, celery sticks and carrot strips on greens. Serve with Peppy dressing and rye bread toast.

Peppy Dressing
(Makes 3 cups)

- 1 can tomato soup
- 1 cup tarragon vinegar
- 2 teaspoons salt
- ½ teaspoon paprika
- 1 tablespoon worcestershire sauce
- ½ cup salad oil
- ¼ cup sugar
- ½ teaspoon pepper
- ½ teaspoon dry mustard

LYNN CHAMBERS' MENU

* Sardine Salad Bowls
Rye Toast
Chilled Tomato Juice
Lemon Meringue Pie
Beverage
*Recipe Given

- 1 clove garlic
- 1 small onion, grated
- 3 tablespoons horseradish

Mix all ingredients well in quart jar. Shake well before using. (This dressing is excellent on any meat or fish salad that needs a tart dressing).

Ham and Egg Salad
(Serves 4)

- 1½ cups diced, cooked ham
- 6 hard-cooked eggs, diced
- ⅓ cup chopped sweet pickles
- ⅓ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing
- 2 tablespoons prepared mustard
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 2 large tomatoes

Combine ham, eggs and pickles

Blend mayonnaise with mustard and lemon juice. Toss with ham mixture. Mound on halved tomatoes and serve on lettuce.

HERE'S A REFRESHING salad that can be a meal in itself especially if it's served with sliced ham, chicken, turkey, cold cuts or cheese for a meal on a plate:

Tomato-Herb Salad
(Serves 5)

- ⅓ cup finely chopped parsley
- ⅓ cup finely chopped green onions, including tops
- Few leaves fresh thyme or marjoram
- ⅔ cup salad oil
- 3 tablespoons tarragon vinegar
- 6 tomatoes
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon coarse black pepper

Combine greens with salad oil and vinegar. Peel and halve tomatoes and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Arrange in layers in a shallow bowl. Pour dressing over each layer. Serve on lettuce leaves, after thorough chilling.

A TASTY SALAD may take the place of salad and dessert if it's like this one made with bananas:

Banana Frozen Salad
(Serves 8-10)

- 2 3-ounce packages of cream cheese
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 2 tablespoons mayonnaise or salad dressing
- ½ cup drained, crushed pineapple
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- ½ cup coarsely cut caraschino cherries
- ½ cup coarsely cut nutmeats
- 1 cup whipping cream
- 2 cups diced ripe bananas
- Salad greens

Soften cheese with a fork. Add salt, mayonnaise and lemon juice. Mix well; fold in pineapple, cherries and nuts. Whip cream until thick and shiny but not stiff. Fold into cheese mixture. Fold in bananas. Turn into freezing tray of automatic refrigerator. Freeze, with indicator at coldest setting, about 2 hours, or until firm.

LYNN SAYS:
Good Sense in Cooking Saves Cents on Meals

A single carrot, shredded, a few green onion tops, minced, or diced leftover prunes or an orange, added to cottage cheese makes a good tasting cottage cheese salad.

Leftover broth from cooked ham, tongue or chicken can be used for cooking dried split peas for a hearty soup. Add onion and celery salt for flavor, then dilute the pea puree with milk and heat for serving.

Raw apple slices combined with peanut butter in a sandwich make the peanut butter go further as well as giving extra nourishment.

Leftover ground beef can always go toward making chili. Team this with cornmeal waffles, and you'll get a tamale flavor, but much more easily.

Freshly baked cookies right from the oven and a chilled glass of milk give an excellent dessert for simple suppers. Or, try hot gingerbread topped with a mixture of cream and cottage cheese.

Cease Fire Talks Resume in Korea; WSB Advises New Wage Increases

A MINOR DELAY—Negotiations for a cease fire in Korea resumed at Kaesong after Communists leaders pledged to keep the conference town clear of armed troops. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway broke off negotiations after the Reds violated their pledge to keep Kaesong neutral.

Apparently a minor delay in the deadlocked talks, Ridgway's action nevertheless was a firm reminder that the United Nations expected the Communist to abide by previous agreements. It was also a pointed hint that the UN means business and that peace can only be achieved by honor on both sides.

There still has been no announcement of any progress over the question of a demilitarized zone across Korea, which has deadlocked the negotiations for days. The Reds insist that the line shall be centered on the 38th parallel. The allies want it along defensible positions, south of the parallel in the west but north of the old political boundary in the center and east.

AN ISSUE FOR '52—The new price control law, signed reluctantly by President Truman, will be one of the big political issues in the 1952 presidential campaign as sure as "God made little green apples," as the cracker-barrel philosopher would say.

He Signs

Reluctantly President Truman signs the new control bill which he described as "the worst I ever had to sign." The emphasis was on "had."

The fact was evident by the President's blast that the nation's families cannot have protection against inflation until "congress repairs the damage done by this new act." He added, with a grimness of tone that startled many reporters, that the measure was "the worst I ever had to sign."

The Republican and southern Dixiecrat coalition that had refused the President the powers he desired in the bill, continued to maintain it was a good measure if it was properly administered.

WAGE INCREASE PROPOSED—With the recommendation of the wage stabilization board that cost of living wage increases be allowed for all workers, it appears the administration will allow such increases at once. President Truman hinted as he signed the new price control law that the government would allow reasonable adjustments in wages to fit cost-of-living increases.

The new regulation would effect workers who are paid by the hour, or are represented by unions, in three general classes: (1) Those who had cost of living provisions in force prior to Jan. 26, 1951, the wage freeze date; (2) those employers and unions who now want to include such clauses in contracts; and (3) those who want to relate wage rates to the cost of living but who do not want an escalator clause in their contracts.

It is estimated that living costs have increased approximately 11 per cent above January, 1950.

THE WEST POINT STORY—The announcement that 90 West Point cadets have been dismissed from the academy for cheating on examinations caused considerable talk across the nation last week. The scandal, breaking of the academy's honor system that dates from 1817, wrecked the army's powerful gridiron team and was the largest mass dismissal since the military academy was founded in 1802.

Maj. Gen. Frederick A. Irving, the academy's superintendent, acknowledged that the action taken was "stern and uncompromising." But he added: "After weighing all factors most carefully, I, and the responsible heads of the army, are convinced that there could be no compromise solution that would preserve the vital honor system of West Point, which is the very heart of the academy."

FOOD PRICES—Home towners throughout the nation welcomed the bureau of agricultural economics' report that plentiful supplies probably will keep food prices from going much higher this year. But most home towners, remembering the past 12 months of rising prices, accepted the statement with reservations.

Since July of 1950 retail food prices have increased approximately 12 per cent. For the whole of 1951 they probably will average at least 10 per cent higher than in 1950.

The bureau said livestock and crop-production prospects indicate that food supplies available during the latter half of this year will be somewhat larger than a year earlier. The bureau also reported beef-cattle prices at times may drop below ceilings during the heavy marketing season this fall. However, a strong consumer demand for meat may prevent any substantial decline in prices.

The bureau said future increases in prices probably would be limited largely to revised price ceilings under the new defense production act. The new law relaxes limitations on margins for processing and marketing food and other products. As a result, some widening of farm-to-retail price spreads may occur.

FUNDS FOR DEFENSE—The powerful house appropriations committee chopped $1,542,608,500 off the administration's requested military budget, but the total for defense still is a record in the peacetime history of this country—$56,062,405,890.

This amount does not include what the country will spend on Korean War replacements and troops in Japan and Germany.

The bill would allot $20,125,574,665 to the army; $15,552,143,225 to the navy, and $19,854,126,000 to the air force.

The committee said a huge outlay is needed "to create sufficient power to prevent disaster in the event war is forced upon us. At the same time the group criticized the defense department's "glaring and wasteful mistakes" in military purchases, "ill-advised buying" of civilian goods, and wasteful use of manpower.

POLIO FUND—The Sister Kenney Foundation will open its annual campaign for funds with which to continue treatment of polio and research in the causes of the disease on August 20. The campaign will continue until September 20.

Sister Elizabeth Kenney, who directs the foundation, is the Australian nurse who came to the United States several years ago and since then attained considerable success in the treatment of infantile paralysis.

Narcotic 'Salesmen' Picked Up

DEFENSE BONDS

Little Savers Buy More Than Investors

The folks in the home towns of the nation who save a few dollars a week are buying the most defense bonds, according to the treasury.

During the first five months of 1951, the treasury sold 11 per cent more $25 and $50 bonds than during the like five months last year. During the same period, however, sales of the giant-sized $1,000 bonds this were 39 per cent under last year.

A treasury spokesman said "investors" are not buying defense bonds, but instead are putting their money into things like real estate and stocks—which are supposed to go up in value as inflation grows.

As a result, the treasury department will start a fall "national defense" bond drive in an effort to stimulate the sales of little bonds even more.

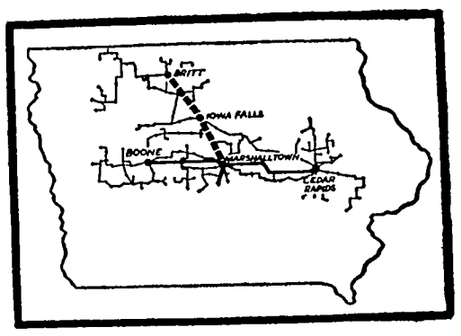
Your Dependable Electric Servant



YOU HAVE no doubt read reports that the Central States Electric Company has been merged into the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company.

Naturally, you ask, "What does this mean to me?"

It means that the electric distribution system that is serving you now becomes a part of an even larger company . . . a company already supplying these services in 22 Iowa counties. As far as the electricity you use is concerned, there is no change. The rate remains the same . . . your billing date remains the same. All of the men who regularly handle service in your area are to be the same.

Your new electric company is supplying electricity to 32 counties in Central and North Central Iowa . . . 221 communities. It links the five major power generating stations of the Central States system with eight other generating plants in the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company system. It forms a new system capable of generating 228,000 kilowatts.

Everyone at Central States is proud to join in this merger which means a more economical operation . . . one that makes it possible to give you even better, more dependable electric service at the same low rates.

NEW HIGHLINES OF POWER . . .

The Iowa Electric Light and Power Company is already planning a new 60,000 kw steam plant to be built at Marshalltown. This, together with the other large generating plants on the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company system, is to be connected to the Central States Electric Company system by a 115,000 volt transmission line extending from Marshalltown to Iowa Falls and Britt. This high voltage line will provide new capacity to Central States towns for load growth and new industries . . . will provide better voltage regulation . . . and insure a more dependable supply of power under all conditions.

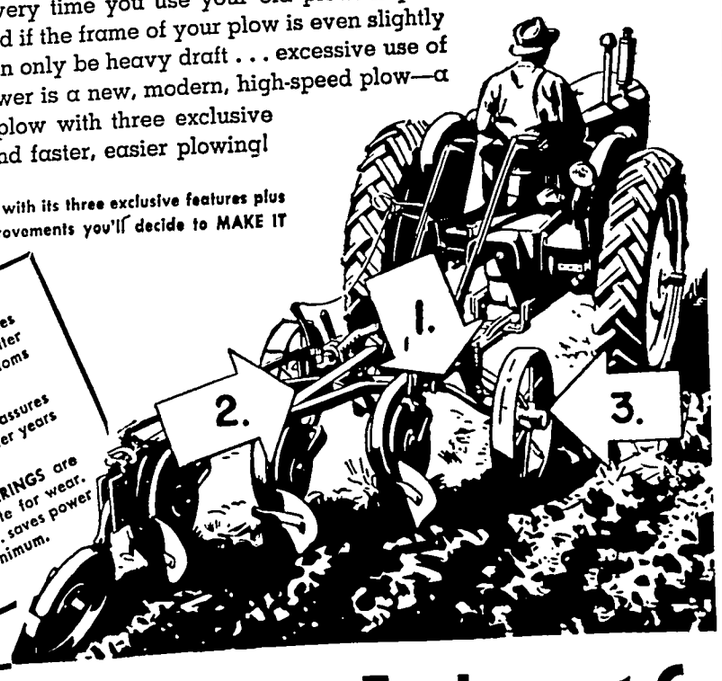
ONLY MASSEY-HARRIS PLOWS HAVE THESE

3 Exclusive Features

Perhaps you haven't thought of it this way, but chances are you're losing money every time you use your old plow. If your plow wheels wobble and if the frame of your plow is even slightly out of line, the result can only be heavy draft . . . excessive use of power. The logical answer is a new, modern, high-speed plow—a Massey-Harris No. 28 plow with three exclusive features for long life and faster, easier plowing!

After you see the No. 28 plow with its three exclusive features plus dozens of other practical improvements you'll decide to MAKE IT A MASSEY-HARRIS!



1 • CONSTANT CLEARANCE LIFT raises bottoms to full 7½" clearance no matter how deep or how shallow the bottoms are set.

2 • DOUBLE X FRAME BRACING assures positive beam alignment even after years of hard usage.

THEY WANT TO WORK

Only One Out of Four Actually Want to Retire When He Is Old

In the face of social security requirements and expanding business programs for retirement at 65, only one American breadwinner out of four actually likes the idea of retiring to a life of complete leisure when he grows old. Three out of four want either to keep on working at their present jobs, or at least to "do something useful" in their sunset years, according to a survey of male policyholders by Northwestern National Life Insurance Company.

Of the 3,000 men covered in the survey only 24 per cent want a life of ease when they reach retirement age; 39 per cent want to be financially able to cut their working hours or shift into some lighter occupation, while 37 per cent would keep right on working at their present jobs if permitted, and would only fall back on a retirement income when physically or mentally unable to hold their jobs any longer.

Retiring to the life o' Riley appeals to more of the younger men—28 per cent of those under 40 said they would like complete freedom from work when they reach retirement age. But only 23 per cent of those aged 40-49 want complete retirement, and of those in the 50-59 bracket—in hailing distance of R-day—only 20 per cent want complete leisure while nearly half of this group—45 per cent—would like to keep on at their present jobs as long as they can "pull their weight." The remainder (35 per cent) of the older men would like to ease up a bit, or shift to some lighter occupation or money-making hobby, but they still want to be useful.

Results of the survey would indicate, the report says, that a modest supplementary retirement income would fulfill the future desires of most Americans. But the fact needs to be faced, the report adds, that many who don't want to retire may have to do so when the time comes, because of inability to maintain the peace necessary to "deliver" satisfactorily on the job, even though they may think they are "just as good as ever." Therefore, instead of the usual rigidity, flexibility is a vital need in the retirement income program of the average man, so that income payments can be "turned on" earlier if needed, or can be postponed while his fund continues to build up, as long as he is able and wishes to keep on at a gainful occupation.

APPROXIMATELY half of those in the survey who want partial retirement would use some of their increased leisure for community service such as general charity work, religious work, Boy or Girl Scout work, child welfare activities, etc., the report shows.

Among the part-time money-making activities planned for retirement years, small-scale farming is the most popular objective; operating some form of small business such as a few tourists cabins is the next most frequently named plan.

Hunting and fishing are by far and away the favorite hobby to which the full-retirement advocates look forward; next come gardening, woodworking and photography, in the order named. Three out of four plan to do some traveling when they retire; four out of five of these future travelers want to do their sightseeing in the U.S.; one out of five hopes to do some foreign travel. Twice as many would prefer to spend their sunset years in the country as would choose the city.

Among the survey group who do not care for a life of leisure is a 28-year-old architectural engineer, who observes in his response, "Too many who retire are dead 12 months later I'll stay in harness" A 52-year-old mechanic agrees with him: "Would rather wear out than rust out." The 60-year-old president of an iron works declares, "Tried to retire after the last war. Nearly went crazy. Started new business with son as manager — now very contented."

A builder remarks, "I note that most of my friends who retire are poorly adjusted" The manager of a wholesale grocery, 60, says, "Have money enough to retire but am unable to decide what to do with my time." An independent oldster who drives a pickup and delivery truck declares, "Seventy-two and still going strong; I do not ask for old age assistance, thanks."

A 44-year-old, however, who yearns for complete leisure to enjoy travel and a life of ease in the country says, "I might change my mind later, but after 25 years of being dominated by an alarm clock, I doubt it."

THE FICTION CORNER

LEGALLY SPEAKING

By Irma Brown Craig

JIMMIE'S RED hair fairly bristled with defiance as he stalked up the pathway to Attorney Denton's spacious home. Any other time freckle-faced Jimmie would have jumped lightly over the low cypress hedge that separated the two homes—but not today!

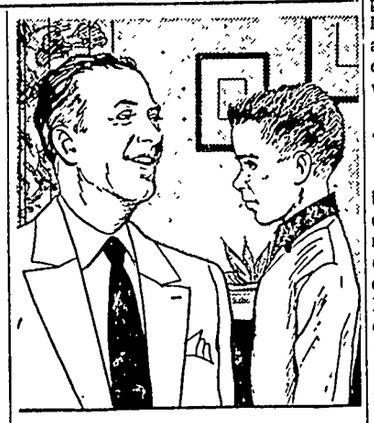
3-Minute Fiction

Glancing over his shoulder, Jimmie could see his Dad watching from the dining room window, in all probability chuckling over the predicament old gabby Denton was in. It was, in fact, Judge Reed's words that had sent Jimmie on this errand. "Son, you go right over to Denton's and tell him exactly what happened. He's legally bound to pay off—he can't very well talk himself out of this one with any of his high-fancy-sounding-legal phrases!" Jimmie knew his Dad and Attorney Denton had been friendly enemies in many a legal battle; he also knew the fast-talking Denton usually bested his Dad. But he'd show Denton today!

"Good afternoon, Jimmie," Attorney Denton smiled as he opened the door, "what brings you here—and why so serious, son?"

Without bothering to return the Attorney's friendly greeting Jimmie took a deep breath and plunged in: "Mr. Denton, while I was in the bakery today, a big dog jumped up on my bike carrier and stole a rib roast—and ran away with it!" Catching his breath, he continued, his words crisp and defiant, "What can be done about it, sir?"

The attorney smiled, "Well, Jimmie, that shouldn't be too difficult It appears to me you have an excellent case against the dog's master. You should have no trouble whatsoever in collecting."



"Son, you go right over to Denton's and tell him exactly what happened. He's legally bound to pay off."

"Is that right, Sir?——well, Mr Denton, it was YOUR dog!" Jimmie was elated—this was much easier than he'd figured.

"Oh—my dog Rex, eh? Well, Jimmie, in that case I'll be glad to pay the costs. How much was the roast?" Denton reached for his billfold.

JIMMIE chuckled to himself, "This guy's an easy one! I'm doing okeh—even better'n Pop could do, I bet!" Out loud he said "Attorney Denton, the cost of the roast is a minor matter—there's my time going back and forth—and" Jimmie squared his shoulders, "my injured reputation. No one will trust me to deliver things for them now—and that's how I earn my money!"

"That should do it," Jimmie thought proudly, "That ought to bring me enough to get a Hop-Along-Cassidy hat, as well as pay Mom for the roast."

Attorney Denton looked thoughtful, "H-mmmmmmm, I guess you've got me on all points, Jim, my boy. How much are the total damages?"

Mentally figuring, "Three-fifty for the roast and two-fifty for the hat." Jimmy replied briskly, "Six dollars. Sir, should cover all costs." Dad would be proud of him—he'd shown the attorney he wasn't so smart after all!

Denton looked down at the minor duplicate of his old friend Judge Reed, then slowly opened his billfold.

"Thank you Sir!" Jimmie thrust the six crisp one dollar bills into his pocket while making a quick, but dignified, move toward the exit. In his haste to get away, Jimmie fumbled with the door knob—most anxious that the attorney didn't see the smile he was trying to hide. He was pleased as punch with himself, and awfully anxious to show Dad how well he'd come off. "Nothing to it at all if you use your head," Jimmie thought gleefully to himself as he stepped out on Denton's porch.

"Just a moment Jimmie," Denton's suave voice interrupted his flight, "Didn't you forget something?"

"No—no, sir, I don't think so." Jimmie glanced around—he hadn't brought anything with him—not even a hat. "Well, Sir, thanks again, and goodbye!"

"But, Jimmie—you HAVE forgotten something. My legal fee for advice. That will be two dollars and fifty cents!"

THE HOME TOWN REPORTER IN WASHINGTON

WALTER SHEAD, WNU Correspondent

Speculation on '52

THERE IS considerable speculation in Washington and, no doubt, the remainder of the country over who will be and who will not be a candidate for the Republican and Democratic presidential nominations. At the moment three men hold the spotlight: President Truman, Sen. Robert Taft and Gen Dwight Eisenhower.

It is far too early to say what will be the outcome of all the behind-the-scene political maneuvering that is taking place in the nation's capital. However, there are some definite trends and speculations that should prove interesting to the home town readers.

Truman's Intentions

In the light of political tradition, President Truman is the logical candidate for the Democratic nomination. As President he is leader of the party and a much more powerful political figure than a great many will admit. His enemies, both Republican and Democrat, contend that he has lost his power over the party and appeal to the average voter, with some jurisdiction, in the light of his relations with congress.

However, his friends and even some of his enemies, remember that President Truman is stubborn, with more than an average feeling for the common man. They remember the 1948 campaign. Even in the face of the numerous investigations of his administrations and its inadequacies, they realize he has taken a firm and historic stand on a number of questions.

He can not be erased from the picture. Korean developments and internal economic picture, centered around the recently signed price control bill, may have much to do with his 1952 possibilities.

Taft Wants to Run

There is hardly anyone in Washington who will tell you that Taft does not want the Republican nomination. To the contrary, it is generally believed he has already opened his campaign with his New England speeches. And it is generally believed his activities will accelerate until the eve of the national Republican convention in an all-out drive to capture the prize

Senator Taft, however, has a number of hurdles to overcome that could be his downfall. First among them is the label of isolationist that has been hung on him. Another is the opposition of the more liberal elements of the Republican party.

To sum up the possibilities and the speculation, Senator Taft has opened his campaign. He may or may not succeed.

The Eisenhower Story

The hopes and fears and aspirations of political ambitious men and the Republican and Democratic parties depend, as perhaps never before in this country's history, upon the intentions of one man—General Eisenhower.

If tomorrow the general should decide to announce himself as a candidate for the Republican or Democratic nominations for President, he could have either one without noticeable opposition.

But there are a number of stumbling blocks in the general's path. For one thing no one knows, at least it hasn't been publicly announced, to which party he belongs. It has been whispered that he is a Republican, but does not embrace those elements of the party that would tear down his work in Europe and isolate this country from its allies Above all, the general is believed to feel this country's future depends on a strong foreign policy.

On the Democratic side of the fence, there are many who think President Truman will throw his weight behind the general at the proper moment and secure him for the Democratic party.

At a recent news conference President Truman said the general's military assignment in Europe would not prevent him from running for President next year. The statement is believed to be Truman's way of removing any road-blocks in the path of an Ike-for-President boom.

That is the political triangle that has the nation talking. Briefly it can be summed up: Taft wants it, Truman won't say, and Eisenhower can have it.

Reds Will Yield

High United Nations sources believe the Communists will eventually meet allied demands for a cease fire in Korea. Much of the talk so far has been of a face-saving nature, they argue. They reason that the Reds have repeatedly exaggerated allied demands in broadcasts in their homelands so they can agree to actual demands and make it appear the U N. has granted numerous concessions. The ways of communism are mysterious indeed.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Stolen Passion

"ONE YEAR AGO I fell in love," Thelma Sabin's letter begins abruptly. "The man was my office boss, I'll call him Royal Rogers. He is 44, married, successful, quiet and reserved. He has four children, whose ages run from 17 to 6, and a good wife.

"I am 27; I was one of five brothers and sisters. But Father and Mother are gone now, and the family scattered. I live in a small apartment with a woman friend, who is divorced and has a boy of 9. I have liked various boys in the last 10 years, came close to an elopement with one special soldier, got cold feet, and decided to wait for the real thing.

"This, what I feel for Roy, is the real thing. It has grown slowly, through understanding, sympathetic interests, a common passion for music, the gradual realization that only the hours we spent together were real. The rest was only a dream. My life away from Roy became just a memory of words he had said, expressions in his eyes, tones of his voice. For months we both knew, but it was only last week that the revelation came, leaving us stunned and dismayed.

Her Lover's Wife

"I have dined at the comfortable suburban home where he lives His children know and like me, and his wife, Alma, has told me more than once that in Roy's eyes I can do nothing wrong. She said once she didn't know why she wasn't jealous of me. She is a good, devoted mother, and because the only son has eye trouble, has made herself his teacher.

"... agony to us both ..."

"Consequently, this discovered love between Roy and me is an agony to us both. Neither one of us can know a happy moment apart. And yet, so great is my sense of responsibility as a possible homebreaker, that I am writing to ask you if you think my solution of this difficulty at all reasonable or right. Please, before you answer, consider the desperate state in which Roy and I find ourselves. The feeling between us is so deep that if he could he would ask his wife for his freedom and make me the proudest and happiest woman in the world as his wife. Indeed, he is eager to do this, although doubting if she would ever consent.

"But before he shocks her with this suggestion, I want your opinion on my plan. Claire, the woman with whom I live, is shortly to be remarried. I will then be sole occupant of a charming penthouse, and my question to you is: who would be hurt, who would be wronged, if Roy became my lover? His wife? His wife need never know. If she suspected, a few weeks on guard would reassure her. If she found out, how much less hurt would she be than if I broke up her home now, and robbed her children of their father!

A Startling Idea

"This is my idea. I propose it because it seems to me much less serious a step than that of breaking up a home. To be Roy's wife would be my dream of ecstatic happiness. But there would be other problems; Alma's heartbreak, his children's disillusionment in their father, society's criticism, and the eventual factions—certain friends for Alma, others on Roy's side. A comparative stranger in Toledo, I would not feel myself capable of assembling a circle of friends comparable to the one he has now. I wouldn't want them; the humblest little country establishment would satisfy me. But he might.

"You see I think of it from all angles. Unusual? Yes, I know it is. But may not a woman for once treat herself to generosity in an affair of this sort, and be the one to take the chance? We have already agreed that if ever one of us tires—which seems unlikely — we will part with unimpaired affection and respect."

If this letter of Thelma Sabin were not expertly typed on very handsome office paper, I would suspect that the writer was a girl of 16.

The answer could be contained in four short words; don't be a fool.

For 25 years I have been reminding girls that the boss, under these circumstances, has nothing to lose and everything—if this sort of love may be temporarily so described—to gain. Thelma merely puts the shopworn old situation in a new costume. She knows, this smart office girl who is so stupid about human affairs, that Roy hasn't ever given the possibility of divorce a serious thought.

What could be more acceptable to a man of 44, head of a noisy vigorous young household, than to find an apartment and attractive girl?

Congress Has Hard Time Subduing Administration

By Wright A. Patterson

IN A GOVERNMENT such as ours, the people are the top brass. They issue the orders and demand that their orders be obeyed. Their direct representatives are those they send to the two houses of congress, senate and house. Any one, big or little, who ignores and flaunts the orders of the representatives of the people, the top brass, must eventually answer to the people.

It has been established as almost a rule that any action taken by congress, if that action did not accord with the expressed wish of the Administration, has been ignored, has been flaunted.

That was true when congress decreed assistance for the Nationalist forces in China, then fighting the Chinese Reds. At the instigation of Secretary of State Acheson supported by the President, China did not receive the aid Congress had said was to be sent. It was the President and his appointees who stopped it. Not the representatives of the top brass, the people.

Over the past decade there have been numerous instances in which the will of the people, as expressed by their chosen representatives have been ignored and flaunted.

Another such was when congress instructed that the air force of the nation should be increased to a total of 70 groups. The President did not agree with the instructions of the representatives of the people, and, at the time, reduced the number. Since doing that he has changed his ideas, and has now increased the number of groups, not to 70 but to 84, again ignoring the action of Congress.

His latest flaunting of congressional instructions was in connection with the installation of radar stations on the east and west coasts. Congress not only said such installations were to be made, but appropriated the needed money to pay for the job.

Those radar stations have not been installed nor started, and the people of both coasts are left at the mercy of Joe Stalin's bombers should he wish to send them this way. The destruction of American coastal cities is something the Administration might be called upon to answer for, because of the flaunting, the ignoring of the action of congress, the direct representatives of the people.

It is to be regretted that the people have no immediate appeal from any arbitrary action of the part of any administration, as has England. In the English system, any vote of a lack of confidence in Parliament means the fall of the government and a new election right then.

We vote a "lack of confidence" when Congress passes legislation the President has vetoed. Such a "lack of confidence" vote has been passed by congress on several occasions during the years of this administration, but the people must wait until 1952 before that administration can be changed.

Then the change will probably be made unless the people have forgotten, or unless a sufficient number of new employees have been added to the bureaucratic payrolls to insure a needed number of votes.

The only recourse congress has to stop that method of vote making is to stop the appropriating of money with which to meet the bureaucratic payrolls. The opposition would quickly stop the appropriations, if they could. They would cheerfully stop the votes, but they do not want to stop the jobs, which they hope to fill should they be successful in the next election.

If the opposition is successful, the flaunting and ignoring of Congress the direct representatives of the people, will be one of the causes. People of the coast states, east and west, may remember that, through their representatives, they instructed the administration to install radar stations as their defense against Stalin's bombers, but their instructions were ignored and flaunted.

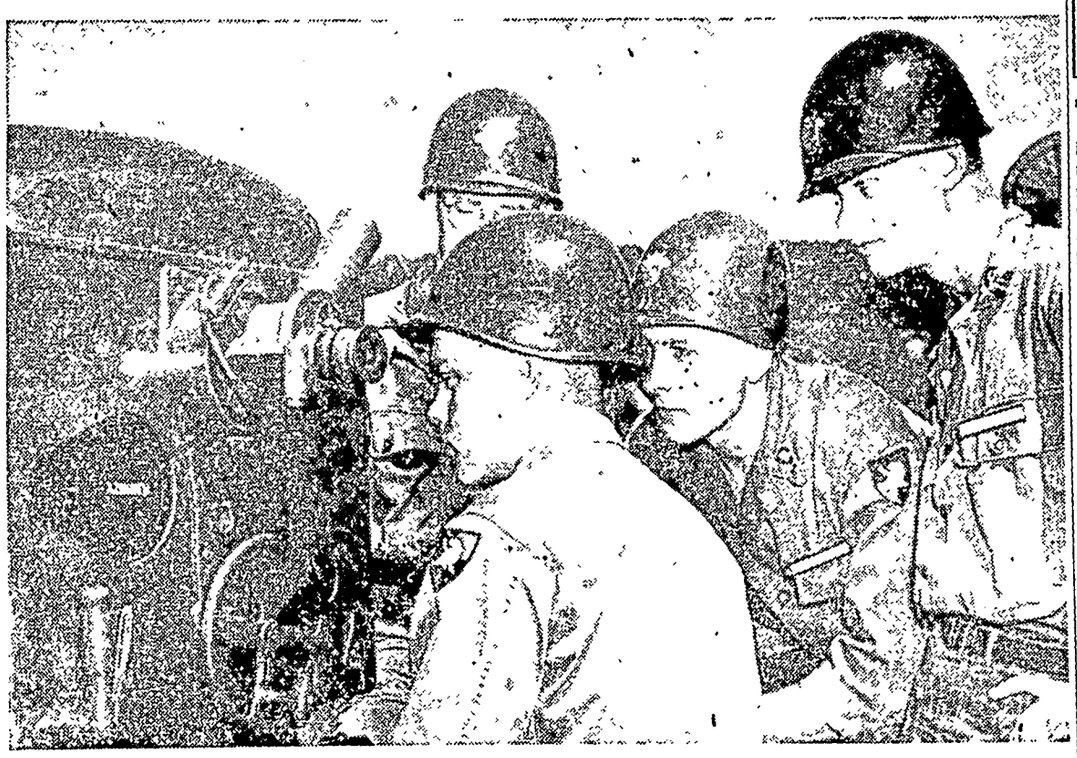
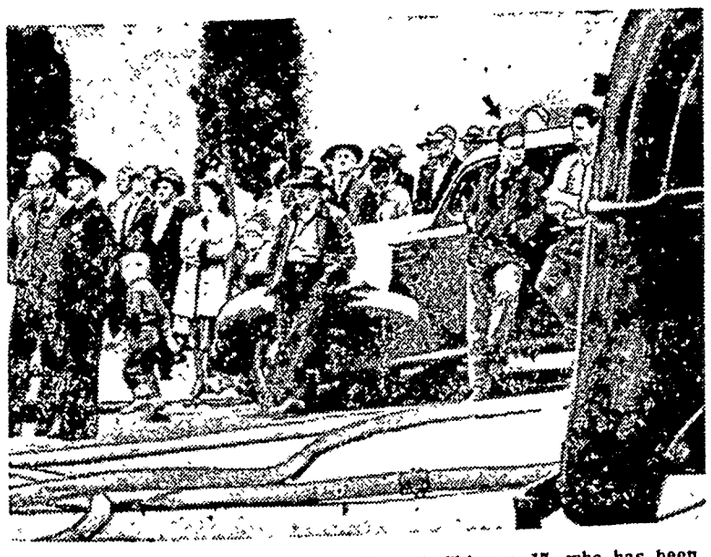
STRETCHING THE REDFIN . . . United States navy workmen are pulling apart sections of the hull of the U.S.S. Redfin, the undersea craft being lengthened at the U.S. naval shipyard in Philadelphia, Pa. A new middle section is in preparation to be fitted into the gap left by the workmen to make room for some vital new war equipment which is so top secret that naval officials will not disclose what is the function of the equipment in sea warfare. However, certain officials have been authorized to state that the submarine, when repairs are completed, will become an entirely new type of underseas weapon, never used in war before.



BLAIK HEARD IT ON RADIO . . . Bob Blaik, quarterback of the Army football team and son of the military academy's athletic director and coach, Earl Blaik, listens (second from right) with classmates on maneuvers. He was of a group of West Point athletes who held an indignation meeting on the campus to protest cashiering of some 90 cadets for violations of the academy's honor code. Young Blaik said the first any of the cadets knew of the mass discharges was "when we heard it on the radio." Another cadet charged they were being given a bad deal and said 200 others could be kicked out on the same grounds. Congressmen were calling for investigation of West Point.

NEW CONGRESSWOMAN . . . Rep. Vera Buchanan (D., Pa.) receives congratulatory kisses from her 20-year-old twin daughters, Jane Buchanan (left) and Mrs. William Cavacante, as granddaughter Kristie looks on. The congresswoman was sworn in to take seat of her late husband. She won the seat in a special election held recently in Pennsylvania's 33rd district. Mrs. Buchanan's membership brings the total number of women in the 82nd congress to 11.

AVIATION PIONEER . . . Rene La Coste, president of the French Societe Air-Equipment, arrived in New York recently with 1354 passengers on the French liner S. S. Liberte from Le Havre and Southampton.



FIRE BOY . . . Arrow points to Kenneth Skinner, 17, who has been indicted by a San Francisco grand jury on counts of first degree murder in connection with fire in which eight persons died. Although most of people in this photo are looking at burned apartment building, Skinner is looking at coroner's ambulance in which victims of the fire were taken away. This picture was made by an amateur photographer.

CAPTIVE IN PARIS . . . He could be singing "Oh, Give Me A Home Where The Buffalo Roam," but this American bison seems to be happy enough as one of the centers of attraction at the Paris zoo. He is licking his chops with pleasure.

Home Stretch Competition is Tough

By GRANTLAND RICE

THERE are two vital physical factors that make baseball what it is, and these two have to be hitting and pitching. In this connection it might interest you to know that the waning season of 1951, now into August, is offering the best competition in both departments that we have seen in some time.

Who will be the best hitters and the best pitchers in the two big leagues? The percentage duel in the National League at the moment gives you Stan Musial, Jackie Robinson and Richie Ashburn. Wyrostek and Campanella follow in order. Stan Musial is still the one to beat. The Cardinal entry is close to 30 points above his 1950 mark, but Ashburn has crashed the Musial-Robinson party with his best year.

Grantland Rice

In the American League we have Coan of Washington, Minoso of Chicago, Fain of the Athletics, Kell of the Tigers, Williams of the Red Sox and Avila of the Indians. These have been under a blanket most of the route. There is no way to give you a guess here, although Ted Williams is the best-known name. Ted came from around .215 to move into this company. He then had three hitless games and dropped back, but he is due to be dangerous all the way.

The home-run anteroom is now well filled In the National League we have Gil Hodges and Ralph Kiner setting the pace, but Musial, Snider, Campanella, Westlake, Rafko, Mays and Thomson are still well grouped.

Kiner, the Pittsburgh Exploder, should get the call. It should be Musial and Kiner again, just as it has been before Kiner is a natural slugger There was a time when Hodges was putting on a runaway, until Kiner spotted the interloper and set out in pursuit.

In the A.L. the home-run crown isn't quite up to the older league A young fellow by the name of Gus Edward Zernial of the Athletics, picked up in a trade with the White Sox, is the best-looking man in the group, unless Ted Williams breaks loose later.

Zernial, a 28-year-old Texan, had 29 home runs last season. He is exactly the type the White Sox could use at this moment. Wertz of the Tigers and Robinson of the White Sox are not too far away.

The Pitching Race

Since pitching is rated from 70 to 75 per cent of winning or losing baseball, the ranking here is of even greater significance. Who will be tops of the two leagues? In the National we have Preacher Roe, Don Newcombe and possibly Ralph Branca of the Dodgers; Sal Maglie of the Giants; Church and Roberts of the Phillies, Staley of the Cardinals; Dickson of the Pirates and Spahn of the Braves

Big Newcombe is probably the best pitcher in his league, although Roe is right along side. Newcombe started slowly, but he has been moving in a hurry the last six weeks.

Those who still have a chance to win 20 or more games in the N.L are Roe, Newcombe, Staley, Maglie, Jansen, Roberts—but most of them won't. To top the 20-game mark they must win from eight to ten games in the next two months, which is considerable winning. Roe and Newcombe should be kick-ins, with that Dodger collection supplying the runs

It makes a heavy difference which team you are pitching for. Gerald Staley of the Cardinals has had a big year So has Dickson of the Pirates—a poor ball club

The amazing Bob Feller is still king of American League pitchers Don't forget that Feller threw his first ball for Cleveland back in 1936, 15 years ago He is still one of the greats.

On the record, Garver of the Browns is the top man He is crowding Feller, but Garver is pitching for the Browns, not for the Indians Just back of these we have Raschi, Reynolds and Lopat of the Yankees, Garcia of the Indians and Parnell of the Red Sox.

The big disappointment so far has been Bob Lemon, who has won 20 or more games his last three seasons.

Comparing the Heavyweights

A New Jersey letter arrives asking us to rank the four top heavyweights in order—including those who are soon to make what is often called pugilistic history.

Hardest puncher—in order—Joe Louis, Rocky Marciano, Joe Walcott, Ezzard Charles.

Best boxer—Ezzard Charles.

Ability to take it—Joe Louis, Joe Walcott, Ezzard Charles, Rocky Marciano (an unknown quantity in this respect)

Ring smartness—Almost a dead heat among Louis, Charles and Walcott. Here again Marciano is an unknown quantity. Marciano must be ranked an unknown quantity on most counts. He is young and strong and he can punch. But Layne, in spite of his victory over Walcott, was entirely too raw, too unskilled, to give any man a rating against him. A fighter who doesn't know he has a left hand simply can't be used as a measure

Use of hormone sprays on strawberries is proving helpful in increasing the set of the berries. Not many years ago, almost all strawberries were not self-fertile, and two varieties had to be planted to get a "set." Many kinds still produce flowers which are not strongly fertile. The use of a commercial berry-setting spray has increased the crop as much as 10 to 20 per cent in many instances.

To provide more light for lower rooms on the inner courts of an apartment house, the owner had the walls of the court painted white. Powerful searchlights directed on these walls simulated reflected sunlight in the rooms.

If a neighboring house or garage is white and reflects too much light into a room you are planning to paint, select a wall color that absorbs light. However, if shadows next door cut off sunlight, choose a tint that makes the most of light. Warm ivories, and pale yellows reflect light, while deep green, blue or gray will absorb it.

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded businesses and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

How are your "motor manners?" Are you as courteous and even-tempered behind the wheel of your car as you are at other times?

Your Iowa Safety Congress urges motorists: Allow for the other drivers' mistakes and keep your temper — practice "traffic courtesy."

This means simply giving other drivers and pedestrians the same courtesies you would expect in their places, and being willing to give a little more when you need to in order to avoid the risk of wrecked lives and cars.

Don't be impatient—or you may become a patient!

Allow plenty of room to pass and to be passed and don't pass in crowded traffice or on narrow or hilly roads. Dim your lights at night—even if the other fellow doesn't dim his And refrain from challenging other cars for the right-of-way at intersections.

Remember If you lose your temper while behind the wheel, you may lose your life!

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

"Counter punching Johnny Cobb claimed his eighth straight KO victim last night when . . " That was the beginning of young Johnny's favorite newspaper story about himself. It marked the end of his amateur fighting

From now on his boxing would be, not only for love of the sport, but for a living. The fight tonight in Moline would be for money. And it would begin the climb that Johnny was determined would take him to the top of his division.

He had what it took - timing, toughness and, most of all, that ability to hit back hard the moment an opponent moved in or made a mistake "Counter punching Johnny Cobb . . . . " He loved that hard, sounding-phrase.

He was probably tense and excited as he drove across Iowa that afternoon. His old car could still make speed and "go the distance," as he said, but it was a sadly beaten machine by most standards. Well, the day would soon come when he could afford . . . . .

But, instead, the moment came when Johnny suddenly realized that the car ahead had stopped abruptly on the highway and was waiting to make a left turn against on-coming traffic.

Johnny slammed down what brakes he had. He took his car off the road at 50 miles an hour. The right front tire blew. We can be sure that Johnny Coob fought back. With all his fine instincts and reflexes he must have fought that wildly jerking wheel.

But his timing served nothing in a car that would not respond. His toughness broke against torn steel. That swift, sure ability to counter punch was nothing against death.

For death on the highway is the quickest counter puncher of all, striking that short, sharp jab to eternity the instant the victim moves in too close or makes a mistake.

MASON CITYAN KILLED IN CRASH ON COUNTRY INTERSECTION

Mr. And Mrs. Arnett Waddingham, Five Children Taken To Hospital

In a two-car crash at a country intersection about 5 miles east and 4 miles north of Klemme Sunday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Arnett Waddingham and their five sons were injured, and William T. Suby, 45, of 1810 Hampshire Street, S. E., a mechanic of Mason City was killed Grace Wessels of Mason City was also injured and taken to the Mercy hospital. Monday she was reported in fairly good condition. She suffered chest injuries. Harry E. Lunning, 1814 Hampshire, S.E., Mason City, driver of the car in which Mr. Suby was killed, was not injured.

The Waddingham family were taken to the Mercy hospital following the crash. Mr. Waddingham suffered a broken nose; two of their sons, Timmy and Mickey were bruised but not seriously injured and were dismissed and taken to the home of their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Suckow of Klemme. The next oldest Waddingham boy, Kenneth, aged 5, was seriously injured and died early Tuesday morning Another son, Dicky, was still in a daze Tuesday and his condition was still not known. Mrs. Waddingham was also seriously injured. On Tuesday X-Rays were taken which revealed that she suffered a fractured vertebrae and will have to spend 6 to 8 weeks in the hospital.

Funeral arrangements for Kenneth Waddingham had not been complete as the Times went to press.

Sheriff L M. Brower, who investigated the accident, said vision was partially obstructed at the intersection where the fatal crash took place.

THE ROOSTER CAME HOME TO ROOST!

Last week the Editor lost a rooster. Evidently the rooster read the story in The Klemme Times which went into the mails Wednesday afternoon. That evening when the Editor went to put his car in the garage . . . . there was the "lost" rooster!

He must have been a very smart rooster, thought the Editor, to read the paper and come home to roost. With his appearance the mystery of the Harvey Barz chicken dinner was also cleared up. It developed that Mrs. Tokie Ahrenkiel had purchased the chickens for the Barz dinner.

Our scouts later found that our good neighbor a block north, Mrs. Martin Brinkman, had captured the rooster in her garden and had brought him back to the owner. That ends the chicken story . . . we hope.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

International Uniform Sunday School Lessons

BY DR. KENNETH J. FOREMAN

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 18:15-20; Acts 4:31-37; Philippians 1:27—2:11; I John 3: 14-24.
DEVOTIONAL READING: I John 4: 7-21.

Why Is the Church?

—Lesson for September 9, 1951

WHAT use is the church? What difference would it make if it were disbanded?

A woman bought a vacuum cleaner on trial, but after using it a while she decided it wasn't any better than an old-fashioned carpet-sweeper and she sent for the man to take it away. When he came around, he discovered that she really did not know how to use the thing. All the attachments were still in the box; she had never found out what they were good for and so she never realized how useful a "vac" can be.

It is something like that with the church. It has many uses which are seldom discovered.

Tell the Church

THE main and most important feature of the church is that it is a fellowship. This should be far more, far deeper, than a mere label.

One rarely-used function of the church was suggested by Jesus. In a quarrel, he said, the first thing to do is to settle it between yourselves. If that will not do, then take a few people with you and see if a small group can reach agreement. If not then "tell the church."

Probably the average congregation today, as a whole, would be a poor judge of quarrels. But suppose some church tried the experiment of forming a kind of consultation-group, made up of the wisest and most Christian persons in it; and suppose members of the church who had differences which would ordinarily be taken into court, were encouraged to consult those counselors for help—wouldn't some quarrels, that now reach the courts, never get that far?

Common Treasury

SOME weeks ago it was suggested here that in some communities the church sees to it that no member of the church goes without a job. It is also a fact that in some congregations either a committee of the officers, or the minister, is entrusted with a fund, sometimes called the Deacons' Fund and sometimes the Emergency Fund, to be used in taking care of real financial emergencies, for the benefit of the members.

Sometimes it is used as a revolving loan fund, sometimes as outright gifts. No detailed accounting is made, because it is important that no publicity be given to the needy cases; hence those who administer the funds have to be persons who can be fully trusted.

The "needy cases" may not be charity cases in the usual sense.

The point is that a church can be a fellowship so close that a person in physical or financial need would think of it as a source of help just as quickly as he would think of his own family. It is his family.

Making Love Real

THE fact is, if there had not been real fellowship in the church all these centuries, it would not have lasted as it has. No outfit can run on and on for centuries if all it does is to provide jobs for a few jobholders.

No, there has been real family fellowship in the church. It does not always come out in official actions of church boards, but the thing is there. Preachers talk about love, and Sunday school lessons mention it. But this is not all. There are enough persons in the church making love real, (see Moffatt's translation of I John 3:18), to more than justify the church's existence.

A poor woman who was in the grip of the drink habit had a Christian woman friend. This friend said to her, "When you feel the craving coming on, even if it's in the middle of the night, call me and I'll come right down and we'll fight it through and pray it through together."

That was what did it. Not the sermons, not the books on temperance, but the fellowship of a woman who would get up in the middle of the night to help her friend through a desperate struggle

Happy is the person who finds a church where there are people like that. For that is what Christian fellowship is: making the other person's cause and troubles your own.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Sore Conscience

A GIRL who has been an absolute fool in her teens may grow up eventually to be a wise, unselfish, useful woman.

But the trouble is that while she is still acting as a fool she commits herself to various conditions, and when she wakes up to common sense and something like balanced judgment, she finds herself so entangled in difficulties that the result is often a state of deep discouragement and depression.

This is Ethel Nevin's case. Ethel writes me from Wilkes Barre, on—curiously enough!—her husband's advice. Inasmuch as her greatest difficulty stems from this very same husband, the situation is unusual, to say the least. She says that her husband thinks my advice may help her.

Ethel writes that when she was a girl she "did what all the other girls did. We went through grammar and high school grades together, and at about 13 or 14 began to get pretty intimate with boys. When I was 17 I already had had lovers—I know this sounds horrible, but I am telling you the truth—and that year I took my first job and got engaged, and of course got myself into trouble.

Learned a Lesson

"Well, Mom and Dad got me through that, and I learned my lesson. The lesson was right there for me to learn all along, my mother was a fine woman, and she did her best to warn me, but nothing could keep me from making a fool of myself. The boy behaved like the little scared rabbit he was, got his aunt to send him west to college, got into the army, and died in an army hospital.

". . . already had lovers . . ."

"I know I had no right to feel so humiliated and so mad, but somehow the thought that he and I really had thought ourselves in love, and might have had a little boy or girl of our own, sickened me. It really sickened me, and for about six years love affairs meant nothing to me, I studied, I had a year at Oxford, and I had a book published about cooking. Then I married Gerald. We had known each other three years, and he knew all that he would let me tell him about myself long before he asked me to marry him.

"So here came what I never dared dream of in my ugly teens. A fine man, admirable and earnest in every way, a fine old home set in a deep garden, a fine family all ready to welcome me. To make the picture perfect Gerald told me of his own infatuation for a married woman in France, and most of the whole bad story. This woman killed herself. He told me this of course to balance what I had told him. He is like that.

Feels Unclean

"We have a beautiful daughter of 9, and five younger sons, going down to twins of three months. My problem is this. I don't feel fit to be this man's wife. I feel that one of his sisters would be a better mother to my children. I feel the past staining and spoiling everything I try to teach them of character, purity and self-control. Now that Gerald may have to accept a high public office, I feel that something about me, and all that old weakness and foolishness, may come up to hurt him.

"I want to go away—away—away from persons and scenes that have always been higher and finer than anything I knew as a girl. I am frightened; a woman has to have some training, some help, to live certain parts in life, and I'm not fit for this one. I'm stamped with sordidness and commonness and associations with boys as ignorant and headstrong as I was myself. Help me to see this in a right light. Help me to find courage to do what is right."

Well, of course I wrote this woman, who is only 33 now, that she was not different from the rest of us in feeling that whole passages from the past might well be wiped from our records, and that we had behaved as stupidly, as selfishly, as blindly, and sometimes as harmfully and wrongly as possible.

I reminded her that some of the most valuable lives in the world have been based on just such disturbed beginnings. And that no other woman in the world is equipped as well as she is to bring up those six children. Every morning of our lives brings us a new chance to make ourselves loved, to forget what we can't change in the past, and to make up with goodness to those who are nearest us, for the mistakes and coldness and cruelty of long ago. Our task is to live in the present and protect what we have.

Take to the Outdoors for a Basket Picnic
(See Recipes Below)

Picnic in a Basket

WITH ONLY a short time remaining for the picnic season, plan one last, memorable picnic before the season is over. A simply prepared menu with family favorites, with the added plus of good eating and carrying ease will bring cheers from everyone including mother and dad.

You've probably had picnics already which require outdoor cooking, and those were wonderful. Then, too, you've probably had the sandwich, potato salad and deviled egg kind. Now you're ready for something that's different. What about a skillet baked chicken with corn bread dressing. It's a sure hit with all the family.

Use young chicken for frying and cut them into serving pieces for picnic style eating. Place a few pieces of the chicken in a paper bag with pancake ready mix to apply a light coating and thus prevent the absorption of grease from the frying You'll have chicken that retains a crisp and tempting texture. Heat fat in a heavy skillet or chicken fryer, having fat ½-inch deep and brown each piece carefully, using kitchen tongs to prevent from piercing the chicken while turning.

Prepare the dressing while the chicken browns, using cooked giblets for extra flavor. Place the dressing in the skillet you have used for browning chicken, leaving only enough grease in it to coat bottom and sides of skillet. Top the dressing with chicken pieces, cover and bake. Then wrap the skillet in several layers of newspaper to keep hot while you go to the picnic spot.

Here are exact recipes for preparing the chicken and dressing:

Golden Corn Bread
(Makes 1 8-inch square)

- 1 cup enriched yellow corn meal
- 1 cup sifted enriched flour
- ¼ cup sugar
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 4 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 egg
- 1 cup milk
- ¼ cup shortening, soft

Sift together dry ingredients in medium-sized bowl. Add egg, milk and shortening. Beat with rotary egg beater until smooth, about 1 minute. Do not overbeat. Bake in a greased 8-inch square pan or greased muffin pans in a hot (425°F.) oven for 20 to 25 minutes.

Fried Chicken

- 2 frying chickens, disjointed
- 1 cup pancake ready-mix
- 1 teaspoon salt

Cook giblets from the frying chicken in salted water to cover. Set aside to use for dressing. Roll chicken in ready-mix combined with salt and brown in chicken fryer or deep frying pan.

Corn Bread Dressing

- ¼ cup butter
- 5 cups corn bread crumbs (made from corn bread)
- ¼ cup diced celery
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- ½ teaspoon sage
- 1 egg, beaten
- ½ cup chicken broth

Cut giblets and butter in small pieces. Add to corn bread crumbs. Add all remaining ingredients and mix well with crumbs. Put dressing in deep skillet and lay fried chicken over top of dressing. Cover and cook in a moderate (350°F.) oven for 30 to 40 minutes or until chicken is tender. Remove cover during the last 10 minutes to crisp the crust on the chicken.

Lynn Chambers' Picnic Menu

*Skillet Baked Chicken
*Corn Bread Dressing
Sliced Garden Tomatoes
Carrot Strips Celery Fans
Radish Roses
*Picnic Lemonade
Chilled Watermelon
*Coconut Gumdrop Cookies
*Recipes Given

Crisp vegetable relishes are good accompaniments for fried chicken and corn bread dressing. When you wash and prepare these, put them directly into plastic bags so that you can take them directly from the refrigerator to put in a basket.

Include a variety of raw vegetables to nibble with the chicken, such as crunchy carrot sticks, crisp celery fans, radishes and green onions, along with whole plump tomatoes that can be sliced when you're setting the picnic table.

FOR A REFRESHING picnic beverage, there's nothing as refreshing as well chilled lemonade placed in a thermos or insulated jug If you don't have either of these, use a gallon glass jug or jar for it:

Picnic Lemonade
(Makes 1 Gallon)

Fill a gallon container with ice cubes or crushed ice. Pour over the ice ½ cup strained honey or ½ cup sugar, mixed with ½ cup lemon juice. Screw the top on tightly and place the jar in the picnic basket where it can serve as a "refrigerator". Surround with relishes and watermelon which you'll want to keep cold en-orute to the picnic. By this time the ice will have melted to make the lemonade.

BRING ALONG plenty of soft, chewy cookies for youngsters and grownups alike. They go nicely with watermelon or other fruits for a simple and well-balanced dessert. Like most oatmeal cookies, these are not only extra tasty but also nutritious:

Coconut Gumdrop Bars
(Makes 16 bars)

- 1 cup sifted enriched flour
- ½ teaspoon soda
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ cup brown sugar
- ⅓ cup shortening, soft
- 1 egg
- ½ teaspoon vanilla
- ⅛ cup milk
- 1 cup quick rolled oats, uncooked
- 1 cup chopped gumdrops
- ½ cup grated coconut

Sift together flour, soda and salt into bowl. Add brown sugar, shortening, egg, vanilla and milk. Beat until smooth, about 2 minutes. Fold in rolled pats, gumdrops and about half of the coconut. Spread dough into greased 7x11-inch pan. Sprinkle with remaining coconut. Bake in a moderate (350°F.) oven for 25-30 minutes. Cool and cut into bars.

LYNN SAYS:
Try New Flavors
On Old Favorites

Everyone knows with soft custard sauce, but what about flavoring it with some instant coffee? Serve this on chocolate or cottage pudding.

Anybody will like spinach when it's cooked and seasoned with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Place in a casserole and make nests in which to break raw eggs. Dust with salt, pepper and shredded cheese and bake until the eggs are set.

Baking powder biscuit is a fine topping for leftover meat pie, and it's even more delicious if you add some sage to the biscuit mix.

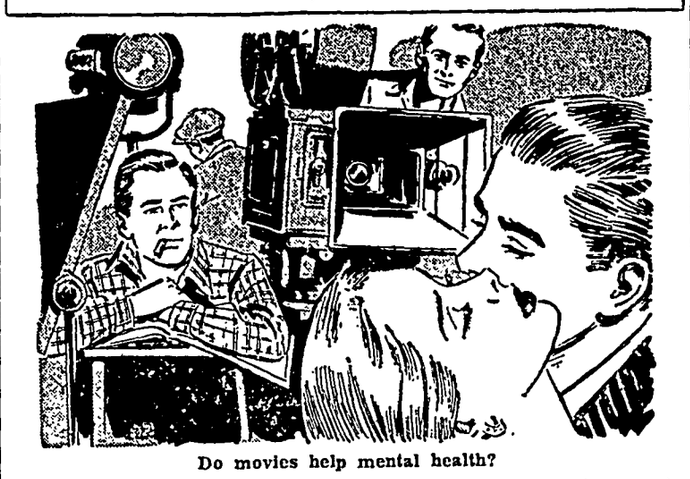
Sandwich cookies that go nicely for a snack—use thin gingersnaps put together with cream cheese to which some crystalized ginger is added.

Cut cold, boiled sweet potatoes into slices, dip in beaten egg, then fine crumbs. Fry in deep, hot fat until deep golden brown and serve with ham or chicken.

MIRROR Of Your MIND

Movies Aid Mental Health

By Lawrence Gould



Do movies help mental health?

Answer: On the whole, yes, asserts H. Sutermeister in the German "Health and Welfare." They provide a useful outlet for emotions which would create tension if kept pent up. But they involve certain risks for adolescents whose lack of experience may lead them to take what they see too literally. The danger of over-emphasis on sex is not as great as that of young people's getting the impression that they can hope to get on in the world with comparatively little effort and may aspire to a life of luxury and leisure Villians are not "foiled," nor is success gained as easily in the real world as in the movies.

May a baby make his own feeding schedule?

Answer: Yes. The idea that a baby who is fed whenever he wants to be will "give you no rest" is not true, especially if he has been fed on demand from the day he was born. Members of the obstetrical staff of French Hospital, New York which two years ago installed a "rooming-in service" (in which mothers and their babies are together from the baby's birth) report that many babies settled down to a four-hour feeding schedule in the day time and sleep right through the night by the time they are taken home. And the mother's average stay in the hospital under this system is but six or seven days.

May a psychoanalyst seem to talk nonsense?

Answer: Yes, particularly when he speaks of your "unconscious" feelings. For unless you have been psychoanalyzed yourself, you cannot fully grasp the possibility that what you honestly believe are your true feelings may be camouflage, and that at heart you have quite opposite emotions. You are so sure that you love your child, for instance, that the idea that you may also cherish secret hostile feelings toward him is apt to seem simply absurd. The analyst neither is accusing you of lying nor expecting you to "take his word for it." You may recognize the truth of what he says once it has a chance to "sink in."

Proteins Prevent Old Age Diseases

By Dr. James W. Barton

MANY OF US may remember when eating meat (proteins) was considered the cause of rheumatism and gout and how elderly persons were advised to eat little or no meat for this reason. Although milk is rich in proteins, milk was considered good food for the elderly.

Today it is known that protein foods are not the cause nor do they aggravate arthritis or rheumatism; it is the starch foods—potatoes, sugar, bread—that contribute to the cause of arthritis and rheumatism. And, unfortunately, many men and women as they approach middle age and become elderly have the mistaken idea that because they are old they must have rheumatism.

Some months ago I quoted Dr. E. J. Stieglitz in The Journal of the American Medical Association, as stating that 40 is the time to take a health inventory. At 40 the silent or insidious progressive disorders, so common in late years, first become manifest.

"Understanding the science of aging is advancing rapidly," Dr. Stieglitz writes. "Clinical investigators in medicine's newest field, geriatrics, are learning more about the limitations and needs of aging persons." From 40 to 60, the ages of late maturity, help to determine the future health of the aged. Geriatric medicine, to be fully effective, must be largely preventive medicine.

The actual beginnings of such common disorders as hardening of the arteries, high blood pressure and degenerative arthritis occur months and even years before their symptoms appear.

Good diet is a powerful weapon for keeping healthy and vigorous in later years. And these degenerative diseases, the diseases that cause wearing down of the body processes because of the wasting away of valuable or needed glands and their juices, are often caused by lack of protein in the diet.

I felt so much stronger—was no longer as tired as I had been. HADACOL has certainly helped me, and I just can't praise it too highly. I'm still taking HADACOL and intend to always have it on hand."

Is it any wonder that Mrs. Smith is going to continue taking HADACOL?

AUTO THEFT RATES LOW IN IOWA RURAL AREAS

Auto theft almost exclusively a crime committed by boys or young men, but the rural youth of Iowa is much less likely to be involved than is his city cousin, according to a study made by Walter Lunden, sociologist at Iowa State College.

Lunden says that FBI figures show that nearly one-half of all auto thefts in the United States are committed by persons under 21 years of age. Many cars are taken by joy riders or by criminals seeking a ready getaway from the scene of another crime.

A study of Iowa auto thefts, made by the socialogist, shows that the rate of theft advances with the size of population and the proximity to larger cities and main highways. Counties in the larger cities are located have rates that are 2½ times those of rural counties. For 1949 there were 65 thefts per 100,000 cars registered in predominantly rural counties where towns were 2,500 or less. Counties containing towns of up to 5,000 population had a rate of 85, those up to 10,000 had 90, up to 15,000 had 110, and the counties with large cities had 151.

The study revealed that auto theft fluctuates widely according to numbers of cars available, number of youths and economic conditions. Thefts were numerous in the depression thirties as well as in the boom times of 1948, but slumped during the war.

Lunden also found a seasonal variation in Iowa auto thefts, with the largest number in the second half of the year. Iowa thieves take the cars which are most readily available. Low and medium-priced cars, which predominate in the state, are the ones most often stolen. This is in contrast to the East where thieves prefer high-priced automobiles.

KEEP LIVESTOCK OUT OF FARM WOOD LOTS

When the summer sun has browned and dried up pastures, many farmers are tempted to turn their stock into the farm wood lot for some supplemental grazing.

But that's not a practice that is recommended by Richard Campbell, extension forester at Iowa State College. He says wood lots are valuable for nesting areas for wildlife, they aid in controlling erosion, and they yield useful forest products, but they are not suited to grazing by livestock.

In the first place wood lots make poor pastures, as the sparse grass and other plants yield less than one-fourth to one-half of the forage that open pastures produce. And pasturing soon leads to poor wood lots.

Campbell says timber should be considered as any other crop, since it provides a good supply of native lumber, fence posts and fuel during winter months. If wood lots are to produce these forest products, and still maintain high yields and quality, they can't be grazed.

Grazing destroys the humus layer of the forest floor, increasing soil losses from erosion and water runnoff. Young trees are often injured or destroyed by grazing livestock, keeping the trees from replacing themselves as the older trees are harvested. This soon leads to a rundown timber.

Livestock tend to trample over the ground too, packing the soil with their hoofs. This prevents or hinders the penetration of air and moisture into the soil. In addition to packing the soil, grazing animals destroy the bark layer on tree trunks and damage roots running along the ground. This leaves the trees susceptible to fungas diseases, and often results in the decay and death of trees.

For these reasons Campbell says it's best to keep the livestock in the pasture and to use the wood lot for timber products and recreation only.

Melvin has been attending college at Silver City taking a special course as a filing clerk typist. After completing his furlough he will go to the Eglin Air Force Base in Florida to take up more special work before being assigned to an Air Force Base. DON'T PASTURE LEGUMES BETWEEN NOW AND FROST

Keeping livestock off this year's legume seedings from now until frost will help get the crop off to a good start next spring and will minimize winter-kill damage

Ralph Krenzin, extension agronomist at Iowa State College, says the young legume plants need about a month of unhampered growth before frost to prepare for winter During this time the plants store nutrients in the roots to carry them over winter and get them off to a strong start in the spring.

Cutting or pasturing up to Sept. 1 isn't harmful. In fact, in the case of new seedings of red clover it is desirable to clip or pasture the stand by Sept. 1 to prevent blossoming and seed production But later cutting or pasturing before frost may harm the stand. Once the plants have hardened off after frost, the top growth can be removed if there's a use for it that makes harvesting it worthwhile However, if hay or pasture isn't needed, it is desirable to leave some top growth to catch snow.

TRIPLET DEER BORN IN STATE PARK

In early June conservation employees at Pilot Knob State Park were surprised to see triplet newborn deer hidden in the grass and they concluded that multiple births are responsible for the mushroom growth of the Iowa deer herd.

These conclusions are partly right. When deer range is overcrowded and food is inadequate, single fawns are the rule and twins are the exception; however, when range conditions are good, for the older does at least twin deer are the rule, and triplets are not uncommon.

Fawn weigh from four to seven pounds at birth and are able to stand in a few hours. They do not follow the mother for the first few weeks but remain where they are placed in hiding among the leaves or grass until the doe returns at feeding time.

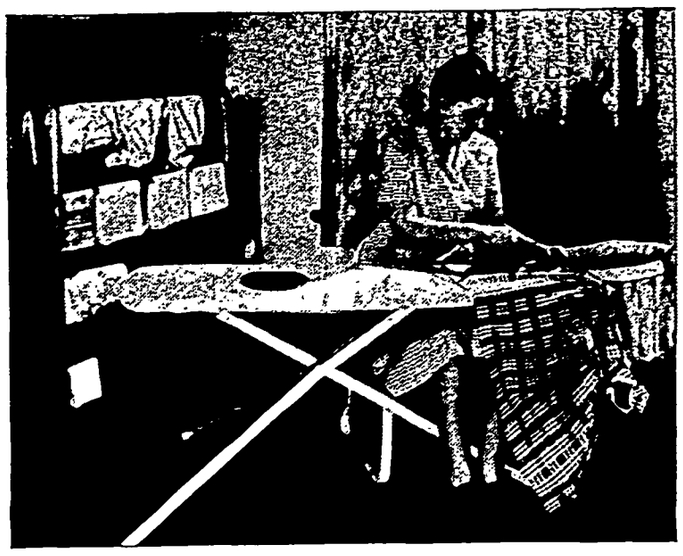
It is during this time that well-meaning but uninformed people find the so-called "abandoned" baby deer. It is a crime under state law and against nature for deer fawns to be molested in any way during this period.

Within a month or even less after birth, fawns begin to nibble on green material and follow the mother for a short distance. By early fall they are weaned. They stay with the parent throughout the winter unless separated by accident. The spotted coat of young deer gives excellent protective coloration and is retained by the fawns until early October, when it is replaced by the gray coat of winter.

All deer shed twice a year, putting on a red summer coat in April and changing back to a gray winter color in September.

Hot Iron, Hot Day—Modernize

YOUR IRONING METHODS



To save time and energy when you iron, set up a good, convenient center, with everything within easy reach. And for good ironing results, know your fabics well.

The week's laundry was a big one, and you have a full basket of unironed clothes between you and the day's end. Oh, for a bit of magic to make this hot work slip past as easily as a cloud in the summer sky outside. Of course, there is no magic to help you—but there is some special know-how that can both lighten and shorten your stint at the ironing board, and give you more finished looking clothes in the bargain.

Your ironing job begins at the line, according to Fannie Gannon, the home management specialist at Iowa State College. If you take care in hanging up clothes, you won't have to touch an iron to some of them, and others will have less wrinkles. Shake the articles out, hang them by the corners. And hang each garment by its strongest point, says Miss Gannon. Hang bedspreads and slip covers over two parallel lines. That way you won't end up with a crease right down the middle.

Wire stretchers for drying trousers are a big work-savers. And as for washable synthetics, particularly nylon and nylon mixtures, hang them on rust-proof hangers and let them drip dry.

Fold To Avoid Wrinkles

Let starched clothes get bone dry. Catch the others at the right dampness for ironing, if possible. Fold dry and damp articles carefully as you take them from the line, for crumpling them in the basket hit or-miss makes stubborn wrinkles.

When you dampen clothes, use warm water. It will spread through the fabric more quickly. Then fold garments carefully, turning hems and other double thickness portions inside. Roll them up lightly, cover with a towel. Better still, says Miss Gannon, put them in a plastic bag. Let the clothes stand at least 30 minutes. If the air is hot and humid, iron them within an hour or two to prevent mildew.

Sit down to iron, if possible. If you sit up to a low, adjustable board in a comfortable chair, you'll save as much as 24 percent of your energy. You'll save about 18 percent of your energy if you sit on a stool. If you haven't a sit-down board, but would like to have one "someday," don't put it off any longer, says Miss Gannon. It's a wonderful worksaver.

Ironing Center

Before you start your ironing, set up a convenient work center. It will save you many motions, will make the whole task easier and more efficient. Place your basket of rolled, dampened clothing on a box or low stool to your left, where you can reach it easily with your left hand. Place your clothes rack to your right for hanging up ironed garments. It's also a good idea to have a table for ironed household linens.

Here are a few helpful tips on the ironing job itself: Know your fabrics and what each requires. If you're in doubt, start with a cool iron. Always iron garments until they are dry, except wools. Iron with the grain of the material. Iron tops of long garments before the lower parts. Learn to iron a man's shirt on a wide ironing board.

Most of us have good modern equipment these days. That's a big step in the right direction. But to make the most efficient use of equipment we need to modernize our ironing methods too—from the time the articles are hung on the line to the time they're ironed and ready to wear or use again.

HAMSTRINGING BUSINESS

What happens when taxes become excessive and inflation takes its cut was called to our attention the other day. It is the story of a small town businessman who was so pinched by high taxes that he had to abandon plans to expand his business.

The firm was doing a fine business, so the boss decided it would be a good idea to expand the production, add some employees and add to the profit side. That he did. But after a year of operation, during which bookkeeping profits were up, he took a look at some of the figures. What he found amazed him. He discovered that the additional profits made from the expansion had been eaten away by taxes, because his firm had been forced into a higher bracket, and higher labor costs because it required overtime pay. He discovered that at the end of the period he had not one cent of additional profit.

He took the only action possible. The firm laid off employees who had been added to the payroll and went back to the plan followed before the expansion. "Why should I work so hard and pay the additional money to the government?" he asked. He answered the question by going back to his former operation.

The situation reported by the small businessman is being repeated in every area of business throughout the nation. Oppressive taxes have hamstrung businessmen, small and large, because they have taken away the incentive to expand and produce more.

A national magazine recently showed how increases in taxes have pinched corporations. It reported that one of the largest companies in the nation found that last year the company kept for business uses and dividends to thousands of stockholders $1.39 for every dollar it paid to the government. Now, the government gets $1.76 for every dollar that stays with the company or its stockholders. The magazine also reported that while profits before taxes were up during the first half of 1951, the profits after taxes were down by four billion dollars for corporations.

As the magazine commented "The investor may become the forgotten man of this emergency period. His dividends, almost surely, will be reduced. And on whatever he does draw in dividends he will have to pay in personal taxes at an increased rate."

The Shaeffer Pen Co., of Ft. Madison, recently published a pamphlet which tells what is happening to the American enterprise system, the system of growth, and expansion which has made this nation the most powerful in the world.

It cites two things, mainly, that stand in the way of continued growth:

1. Entrenched bureaucracy's growing power to dictate operations of the American business system.

2. Continuing excess of the graduated income tax.

"In the last few years," says the pamphlet, "the rewards for a winning performance have been whittled down so drastically that the typical American urge to excel, to create new business, to build a real career has been seriously weakened. Let's make sure it will always be worth the effort to be a winner in America."

CHICKEN, TOMATOES TOP SEPTEMBER FOOD LIST

Chicken—and plenty of it—heads the U. S. Department of Agriculture's plentiful foods list for September.

Broiling chickens and hens will be most abundant—with probably a third more on the market than a year ago.

A second headliner is the tomato. This summer's crop is quoted at about 7 percent heavier than last year's. So there should be plenty of tomatoes available at budget prices.

Two other fresh vegetables which still will be plentiful are beets and cabbage. New-crop potatoes from the Midwest are coming in September, too, and the cost should be moderate.

IN RIGHT DIRECTION

Action by the Civil Service Commission in filing charges against Alvin Cook for violation of the Hatch Act is a step in the right direction.

But it is just a step. And by no means should be considered the final settlement of the case of attempts by paid employees of the Production and Marketing Administration to influence free elections.

It also should serve notice on those who would use their official position and official PMA meetings for electioneering that such practices will not be tolerated.

When the allegations originally were made after overwhelming evidence of such irregularities were reported in virtually every section of the state it was called "just politics" by some high-placed officials in Washington. The charges were called to the attention of Agriculture Secretary Charles Brannan as well as the Civil Service Commission. Now, it develops, Brannan will have to rule on whether two state PMA officials were involved in such practices and if their actions are grounds for prosecution. The Civil Service Commission has made its position clear that the "primary political activity enforcement jurisdiction" in the case of Paul Benner and Hervey Hazen, state PMA chief, rests with the Department of Agriculture. There has been some legal question as to whether those two are subject to penalties of the Hatch Act. The Secretary now has the information from the Civil Service Commission and it is now squarely up to him to take action.

Yet to be made public is the report of the senate sub-committee on election practices, of which Sen. Guy Gillette is chairman. We feel that such a report would lend further emphasis to the fact that paid PMA officials should devote their official time and duties to administration of the farm program rather than to electioneering.

The junior senator from Iowa has said that one of the questions involved is whether or not the facts developed by an investigation "affords grounds for recommending amendatory legislative action by the U. S. Senate. If such legislation is needed to keep the farm program out of politics now is the time for action in that direction.

The action thus far should serve notice on those who would take such matters lightly, as did Hazen when he said 'let them have their fun' that in a country where the system of free elections is a cornerstone of our way of life, the representatives of the people and the people themselves, will not tolerate attempts to use official position to influence elections.

CHANGE OF PASTURES INCREASES LAMB GAINS

Spring lambs can't be expected to maintain rapid gains indefinitely on bluegrass pasture because they will not eat the grass when it matures.

That's one of the reasons Eugene Francis, livestock marketing specialist at Iowa State College, urges Iowa sheep raisers to be ready to shift lambs to supplemental legume grass pastures at the time bluegrass matures. By changing pastures they can keep the lambs gaining fast.

The cool spring and early summer this year has made for rapid gains, and Francis suggests that sheep raisers carry their lambs to heavier weights as long as the weather stays cool. But market fat lambs right away if the weather turns hot because they will stop gaining.

Francis says there is a possibility of the wool market strengthening soon and cites the larger pelt credit on heavier lambs as another advantage of keeping them as long as they continue to make good gains.

The weather this year has been good for lamb gains, but it has also been favorable for sheep parasites, Francis points out. A change to clean pasture now may help avoid parasite trouble that usually flares up at this time of year. Francis emphasizes that sheep raisers should also continue to use parasite preventive measures. He recommends supplying a mixture of 1 pound phenothiazine to 9 pounds of salt in salt boxes for lambs on pasture to help control parasites such as stomach and nodular worms.

German Youths to Learn About U.S. Living in Rural Homes

By Anne M. Mattingly
WNU Washington Bureau

"The people are so nice—and it's wonderful to be able to say whatever you want to in America. I'm so happy to be here." This statement by 16-year-old Christal Mohr, one of the 74 German teen-agers who arrived in this country recently to study our agricultural methods under a joint national grange and state department program, accurately represents the collective sentiments of the group as they looked for the first time on the American way of life.

These youngsters are to be sent to grange homes throughout the country, a large number going to Washington, Virginia, and Ohio. There they will become "members" of the family, will help on the farms, and will attend the local schools. The homes have all been offered, and in most cases the boys and girls were given a choice of the type of farm on which they wanted to live. The financing while here will be done completely by the grange families in return for the farm work that the youths do.

Although this program of the state department and the national grange is one of exchange, it represents for the most part an opportunity for foreigners to see not only our agricultural methods but also to study our national philosophy and the manner in which we live. It is hoped that after a year in this country, the students will inject into their native Germany upon their return, a good deal of what they have absorbed. Other aims of the program include youth leadership, training, and agricultural progress.

This group of 74 represents only a small part of the entire program. There will be 450 German teen-agers sent to study here this year, but the total from Germany during the year, including all age groups, will be almost 3000. This, in turn, is still only a part of the "Campaign of Truth" program inaugurated by President Truman last year which brought 10,000 persons from 55 countries to the United States to live, work, and study.

JUST ABOVE THE teen-age level, there are "Young Farmers Groups", young men and women in their twenties, from Germany, Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, who do much more traveling than the younger students. They shift from home to home and learn all types of farming, whereas the teen agers become "members" of one family for a year while they go to school.

Since only about one in ten of the group of 74 which arrived recently can speak English, it might be assumed that language would be a great barrier to their American education. However, there was a girl in a similar group last year who, within a month, had learned English well enough to compete with her fellow pupils on their own terms. Officials of the state department and the grange praised the teachers in our schools to whom fell the task of educating these students. The extra time spent with them and the understanding given them did much to aid the rapid adjustment of the youngsters.

Upon their arrival in New York, this latest and first such group of German teen-agers were whisked down to Washington where they, in a group, spent part of their second day in this country writing home to their families to let them know of their safe arrival and to tell of their first impressions.

While in Washington, they met Herschel Newson, master of the national grange, who welcomed them to this country and added that he hoped the Americans with whom they came in contact would learn as much about Germany as the students did about America—that in order to be successful, the program had to be reciprocal.

The group also met Harold Howland, of the exchange of persons division of the state department, who summed up the whole purpose of the program with his quotation from Charles Lamb. "How I hate that person!" Lamb is reported to have said "Why, do you know him?" someone asked. "Of course not", replied Lamb, "if I knew him I wouldn't hate him."

If, through the immediate sphere of the study of agriculture, and the greater and broader one of human relations, this program can continue to aid in the cause of international understanding, it will be a great boon not only to this country, but to the entire world. If knowledge and understanding are present, there is less chance of hatred.

PERFECT DAY

By Sallydale Wimbrow

EARLY FALL brisked the air. The lawn surrounding the little church was caked with brown fallen leaves and in the sky, a bright sun darted behind a cloud.

"Such a perfect day" Nell thought, "Everything is on its good behavior for Steve and Mary."

She folded her hands in her lap and relaxed in her seat. The organist softly began playing the pre-wedding melody. An unexpected tear started down Nell's cheek.

3-Minute Fiction

"That's right," she told herself. "Go ahead and cry. Make a fool of yourself and bawl like a baby. Forget about your plan to seem calm."

"The church looks lovely. Isn't it beautiful?" someone whispered. "Everything is so perfect."

"Yes" Nell thought, "Lovely, the white flowers, the fern, everything perfect. I musn't be sad. I should be happy for Steve, for this is what he wants. It seems so sudden though . . . his getting married. Just yesterday he was only a boy interested in boats, automobile engines, camping out in the woods for weekends. Is he ready for a wife, a family? Oh, my Steve, I love you. But I would not hold you back. Not if this is your happiness. You have chosen Mary and she is lovely. I would not fight to keep you for myself, though I can't imagine what my life will be now, without you."

The opening strains of the wedding march sounded. People stood. There was the rustle of new dresses, the sound of feet shuffling on the floor. Nell felt stiff. She pulled herself up, put one hand on the back of the pew before her. There was Steve, standing by the altar, his face slightly flushed, looking toward the back of the church. His eyes were bright waiting for Mary. Nell remembered seeing that brightness in his eyes so many times before. She remembered how she had watched him often when he was only a small boy, playing with skates and toy pistols. As he grew, so did her love for him.

"Only yesterday" Nell thought "You were mine. Now you will never be mine again. Mary will hear your questions, solve your problems, be there when you need help. She is your life now. I have given you all I have to give. I only hope you will remember me, Steve, remember me with a smile. I will always love you and cherish the happiness you gave to me."

MARY was coming down the aisle. She seemed surrounded by a faint glow. Nell trembled slightly at the sighs of the admiring congregation. Mary was indeed a vision. By the altar, Steve was leaning forward, tense There was that eager expression on his face that Nell remembered so well.

"The picnic" she thought. "You took me by the river for a picnic—and we carried your old portable phonograph. You played your favorite records—laughed at me trying to learn about jive. That eager alive look you have now. We were so happy Steve. You kissed my cheek and told me I was your girl—There would never be another girl for you. That's what you said, Steve—remember?"

Now the couple stood together, facing the altar. Nell heard the words that tied Steve and Mary together for a lifetime, unable to control a soft sob. "Mary, Mary—make him happy. It's up to you now."

Then it was over. The organ sounded again and Nell watched the couple turn, start for the door, laughing. Steve clasped Mary's hand and they brushed by Nell. "He doesn't even see me" Nell thought "He didn't even look."

Outside a photographer was taking pictures.

Nell lifted her chin, tried a bright smile. She walked up to Steve who was standing alone while Mary posed for her picture.

"Darling" she whispered "It was perfect. I am so happy."

He leaned and kissed her "Thank you, Sweetheart" he said. Then his arm stole about her waist and he hugged her.

"I'm rather happy myself" he said and then he looked deep in her eyes. "I guess it's the most perfect day in my life, Mom."

Chemistry Has Changed Life In the Small Towns of America

Chemists and chemical engineers are transforming the life of small towns and rural areas as completely as they are remolding metropolitan city life, Dr. N. Howell Furman, president of the American Chemical Society, reported recently.

"Chemical scientists and technologists serve modern man every moment of his life, wherever he may go," Dr. Furman asserted, outlining the theme of the society's diamond jubilee meeting which will be held in New York September 3-7, and by local sections in all parts of the country during National Chemistry Week, September 2-9.

A MAIN STREET FEATURE

When a handful of chemists organized the American Chemical Society in 1876, chemical activity was confined to a few centers, principally in the larger cities. Although they met in a small room they constituted a substantial part of the nation's chemists at that time.

Today the American Chemical Society with 65,000 members is the largest organization of professional scientists in the world. Its 137 sections include membership in every state in the union.

Chemicals have not only become the nation's first industry, Dr. Furman noted, but the tendency of industrial establishments to locate plants near sources of raw materials has led to widespread diffusion of chemical manufacturing and processing. Many new towns and cities formerly rural or even uninhabited areas owe their existence and growth to the expanded activities of chemists and chemical engineers in serving modern civilization.

The profound changes these scientists and engineers have brought about in our daily lives are by no means confined to communities with chemical industries, Dr. Furman observed. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the clothing we wear, the health we enjoy, the cars we drive, the houses we live in and the wide range of objects we use throughout the day all reflect this transformation.

Chlorination of drinking water, for example, is a feature of modern life in the smallest towns as well as the largest cities. Fluoridation of water to prevent tooth decay, especially in growing children, has recently met with medical approval following a five-year test and promises to take its place with chlorination as a public health practice in our cities.

Large cities like Rochester, N.Y., are now fluoridating their water supplies, but Dr. Furman found it significant that the tests were first made in two smaller New York cities, Newburgh and Kingston. Records of tooth decay among children in these adjoining communities during the test period clearly established that the incidence of dental caries, or tooth decay, was less in Newburgh where the water supply was fluoridated than in Kingston, the control community, where there was no fluoridation.

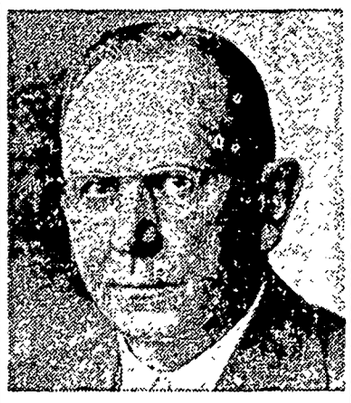
Maysville, a small Kentucky city, was the first in that state to treat its drinking water with fluorides. Dentists at Maysville were chiefly responsible for promoting fluoridation of water. Larger Kentucky cities followed suit.

Life in West Branch, Iowa, three-quarters of a century ago is compared with small town life today by former president Herbert Hoover in his memoirs. The townspeople then churned their own butter and made their own dyes. Many of the necessities of life which people then provided for themselves are now supplied by industries founded on the research and technology of chemists and chemical engineers.

A wide range of products of chemical research and engineering has special importance for the home town dweller and the Main Street businessman. Enjoying more living space than the city dweller, with room for a garden and driveway and with his own roof overhead, he is the particular beneficiary of such products as plant foods, pesticides and roofing materials, to name only a few.

The need for education in science and technology to keep abreast of the expansion of the chemical industry and profession was stressed by Dr. Furman, who is head of the chemistry department at Princeton University.

"Many members of the profession receive their first scientific training in the high schools of our smaller communities," he pointed out. "The American Chemical Society is interested in aiding high school teachers to interest young boys and girls in the profession. Many local sections of the society make a practice of inviting high school students and teachers of chemistry to attend section meetings.



Dr. N. Howell Furman

In addition to reviewing the progress made by chemists and chemical engineers during the past 75 years, Dr. Furman declared, the diamond jubilee observances will focus attention on the prospects for even greater progress in the future.

Since smaller communities will not only benefit from new chemical developments, but will play a substantial part in bringing them about, the American Chemical Society through its local sections will parallel the program of National Chemical Week observances in New York with observances in communities and schools throughout the country.

The week of September 2-9 is the opportune time for the people of America's home towns to learn the fabulous story of chemistry and the vital effect it has had on the ordinary man in his everyday living.

Here again is an opportunity for the local merchant, by exhibits and advertising, to tell the local community a worthwhile story, the story of "Chemistry—Key to Better Living."

Watch Inspection Time Is September 6 to 15

Too often the owner of a fine watch is apt to take his timepiece for granted—and forget to bring it to his good friend, the local jeweler, for a necessary periodical check-up and oiling.

The jewelers of America will be reminding the public of this fact during national Watch Inspection Time, September 6 to 15, and it would be well for the possessor of a quality watch to visit the service department of his community jeweler for the needed timepiece check-up.

Here are a few "do's" and "dont's" for protection of your watch:

(1) Always take your watch to a quality watch-service department for any necessary adjustment, cleaning or repair.

(2) Insist on genuine factory replacement parts.

(3) Wind it once a day, preferably in the morning. And when you wind it, take it off your wrist.

(4) Try not to expose it to extreme hot or cold conditions.

(5) Keep it away from perfume, powder, or loose tobacco crumbs.

(6) And, above all, if the watch should lose its accuracy or stop completely, don't try fixing it yourself. Tinkering with a fine watch movement can be an expensive experiment. Your community's watchmaker makes it his business to nurse watches back to health.

A periodical cleaning of your wristwatch is a "time" saver in two ways. The repairman not only removes any dust or dirt that might have sifted into the movement, but also congealed, dirty oil.

Like any machine, your precious watch movement needs oil—and the right oil—to protect its moving parts against frictional wear. The lack of proper lubrication too often results in this wear, and ultimate inaccuracy or complete stoppage of the movement.

Avoid all possible shocks to your watch. Remember, many an automobile's shock absorbers have been broken when going over a deep rut in the road, and even a "shock-resistant" watch can take just so much out-of-the-ordinary jolting.

When you wind the stem of the timepiece, the action tightens the mainspring, and stores new energy needed to run the watch. Wind it gently with the thumb and finger, and stop when you feel that the tension is at the maximum it can take without damage.

A New Watch?—Ask Your Jeweler's Advice

Are you one of the several million Americans who is a prospective watch buyer this year? If you are, be sure to consult your home town jeweler.

A fine timepiece is like a fine automobile—only an expert really can tell its performance possibilities. And your local jeweler, who has been selling and servicing fine watches for generations, is the best qualified person in your community to rely upon when it comes to the purchase of a watch. He will give you excellent advice.

When selecting a watch, personal preference in style, together with pocketbook capabilities, must first be considered. At that point, however, your jeweler is in a position to help you to select a fine watch which he knows is built to give you accurate, dependable service over the coming years. His store and reputation are the guarantee behind the product he sells.

GRASSROOTS

Lack of Positive Platform Has Defeated the GOP

By Wright A. Patterson

OVER THE YEARS I have voted with but rare exceptions the Republican ticket.

One such exception was in the contest between Harding and Cox. As a protest against the unfair methods of the old guard senators in nominating Harding, I voted for Cox. The old guard was unfair, un-American and un-Republican.

In the campaign between Landon and Roosevelt for a second term, I went along with Landon, despite his endorsement of New Deal policies, tempered only by his insistence he could do a better job with them. By not having a Republican program, or a Landon program, but by accepting the Roosevelt program, Landon lost.

If they must have the New Deal, the voters prefer to leave it in the hands of the originators.

In his campaign against a third term for Roosevelt, Willkie used as a subject for a campaign address "I could do it better," referring to New Deal policy.

He deserved to lose, because he was no Republican. He was a candidate who gained the Republican nomination by unfair methods. Willkie flopped as an advocate of New Deal policies on the Republican ticket and deserved his fate at the polls.

Dewey, in his first campaign, came nearer supporting New Deal policies than anything he or his party proposed as their own. When given his second chance, he talked only of a senseless and meaningless term, "unity," when people were asking for a statement of national policies. The Republican party offered them no platform, leaving it up to the candidates to propose their own platforms.

The candidates had no platforms, or at least could not enunciate them. So again the Republicans failed for lack of a constructive party platform, a statement of principles for which the voters were so avidly waiting.

To return a bit farther back to the campaign between Roosevelt for his first term and Herbert Hoover for re-election, that campaign for the Republicans was conducted by the Republican old guard senators, such as Jim Watson, Reed Smoot, George Moses, and others.

They had not been able to use Hoover and preferred to deal with a Democrat, rather than Hoover with a second term. They said so, and admitted that their interest in the campaign was only re-election of themselves. They deliberately worked against Herbert Hoover.

They succeeded in defeating both Hoover and themselves.

In the election for membership in the 80th congress, an off year, the Republicans secured a majority in both houses. They could not undo much that had been done, but they could refuse appropriations to pay the vast army of bureaucrats that was a factor in the Democratic successes.

They did not do that. Expecting a Republican president at the next election, they wanted the jobs, continued so they might be filled by Republicans. Visions of future patronage for Republicans were the alluring prospects that provided pay for the millions of Democratic job holders.

But with the meaningless word "unity" the only thing talked about, President Truman beat the Republicans to the punch, and he was given a Democratic congress that the Republican 80th congress had paid for with its refusal to limit bureaucratic appropriations.

And so it has been for 20 years the so-called leaders of the Republican party have been responsible for its defeat, either deliberately planned or brought about by lack of a definite and meaningful program.

Their profuse condemnation of the opposition has not been effective, nor will it be.

Has the Republican party ceased to function as a party?

Are its candidates all on their own, with each one supplying the principles he thinks best; have the party leaders ceased to lead in anything other than vitriolic opposition to what others propose?

Can the party, as such, no longer enunciate policies and principles?

Under such conditions, the party has ceased to be of value to the nation. It is time it gave way to some political group that can and will.

We need two functioning parties.

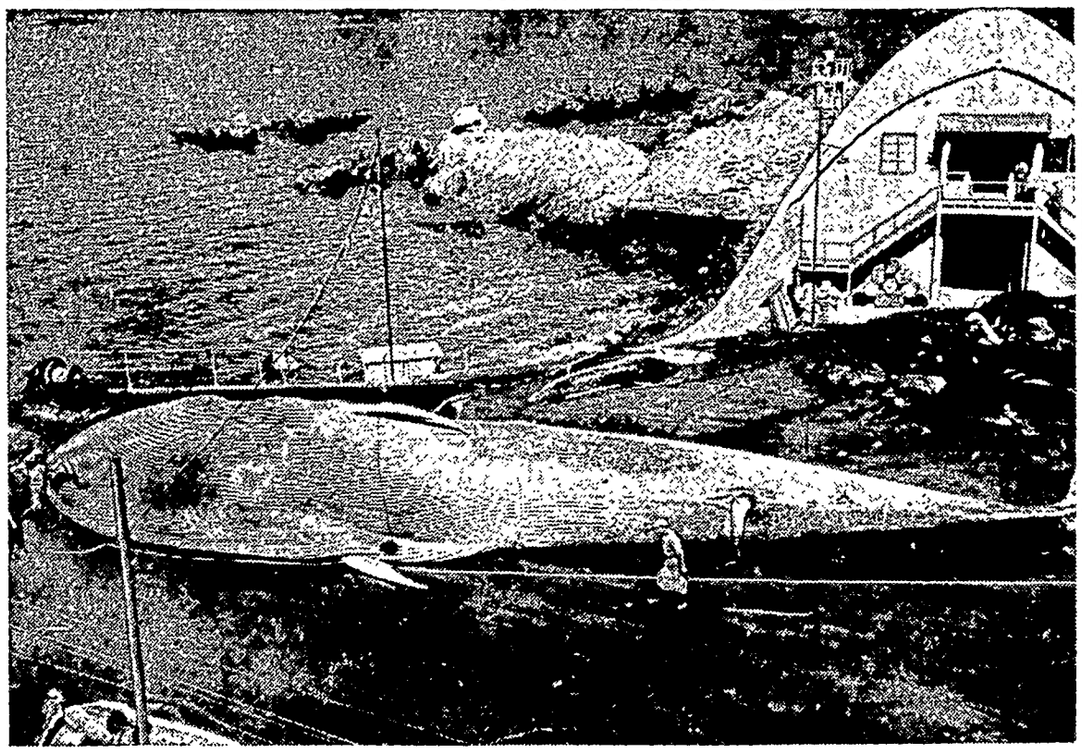
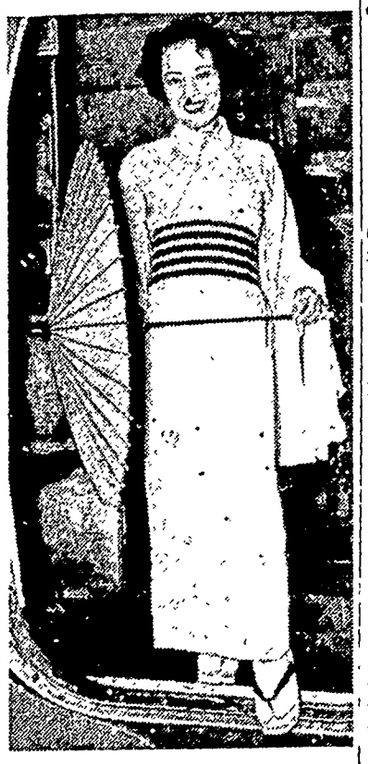
Congress gave the President control of both wage and prices, but he exercised only control of prices, and permitted labor to get all the wages it could, regardless.



ANDES WHALERS . . . The war scare in the world today has created a great demand for whale oil, and Chile has entered the world's most thrilling profession—catching huge 74-foot, 69-ton mammals like this one. At Quintay, a fleet of eight boats is catching 1200 whales a year. Chile's whaling industry produces about 5000 tons of oil, the finest for precision machinery, and about 1000 tons of nitrogen fertilizer, with a total value of $4 million. The industry is non-stop the year around. From December to May, the whaling takes places 70 miles off the coast, and from June to November it goes on in the polar regions.

STERN GREETING FOR CZECH AMBASSADOR . . . Czechoslovakia's new prime minister, Dr. Vladimir Prochazka, faced an angry reception as he arrived in the United States. Pickets from the Czech National Council of America marched along the docks in New York carrying placards which protested the imprisonment of A.P. correspondent William Oatis and the disappearance of Czech Archbishop Beran. Also, Prochazka was faced with a chilly reception when he made diplomatic calls upon the President at the White House and at the state department, which has entered diplomatic requests for the return of the imprisoned American citizen.

MIRACLE BABY HUSKY BOY . . . Nurse Doris Hansen, Hackensack, N.J., hospital, holds Raymond Donnelly, Jr., who was born via caesarean section to Mrs. Ida Donnelly. The baby represents a triumph for medical science. Mrs. Donnelly suffers from a dread form of anemia—an heredity condition in her case in which red corpuscles are destroyed so rapidly that frequent transfusions are required. Doctors say that Raymond, a 7 lb., 4½ oz. boy did not inherit her disease.



STAR FROM THE EAST . . . Shirley Yamaguchi deplanes at La Guardia Field, N.Y., as she comes from Japan to see the sights of New York and other American cities. She recently completed her first American motion picture.

FROM MUNITIONS TO BEAUTY . . . Emmanuel Shinwell, British defense minister, took time off from rearmament talks recently to journey to Grimdon Park, Durham, to judge a beauty contest. He is exchanging a bit of jocular talk with the three finalists in the contest. It must take a defense minister to offer a very effective defense against the charms of three such lovely young ladies. Shinwell may be saying, but who wants to defend himself from this?

Mize One of Game's All-Timers

By GRANTLAND RICE

AN old friend of mine by the name of George Ade once started a slogan, hooked up with an organization, which he called "Flowers for the Living."

This is not a bad idea. I don't know what flowers ever mean to the dead. Or kind words. Or cheers. Or anything except the peace of eternal sleep.

We feel that it is almost impossible to write too many kind words about an old Georgia friend known as Johnny Mize, the Demorest Destroyer.

Grantland Rice

Johnny has always been a large, powerfully built, rather slow-moving performer destined to be no part of a Ty Cobb, who came from a neighboring Georgia village.

Johnny reported at Greensboro slightly over 21 years ago. He was then 17 years old. Today he is on his way to 40.

Johnny lost three years of baseball in the Navy, 1943, 1944 and 1945, a three-year term which cost his record at least 100 or more home runs Possibly 150 home runs, since he was hitting at that clip after he had surrendered his Navy cap.

Around 15 years ago, St. Louis tried to pass Mize along to Cincinnati's Reds. Johnny had a bad knee and the Reds turned him back. At that time everyone thought Mize was through—a fine power hitter with a bad leg.

So Mize had to move back to the Cardinals. He began hitting home runs without losing any time. He also began winning a flock of ball games.

The Cardinals, meaning Mr. Rickey, sold Mize to the Giants in 1942, nine years ago. They figured Mize was all through, a washed-up slugger.

Mize gave the Giants 26 home runs that season. But he gave them 51 home runs in 1947 and 40 home runs in 1948. Those were the two years he tied Ralph Kiner, the Pirate slasher, now the best of all the home-run hitters. Mize was sent to Kansas City in 1950. He was brought back to hit 25 home runs that year.

Mize was 35 when he tied Kiner's march the second time; Kiner was 25. That's the type of hitter Johnny Mize happens to be. He could spot 'em 10 years and handle 'em. But you can't spot 'em too many decades. Johnny Mize is one of the great power hitters of all time. And quite a fellow beyond that.

The Greatest Hitters

There are many styles of great hitters. Willie Keeler was one of the great place hitters. I'll have to rank Ty Cobb above the immortal Willie.

Ty was a punch hitter. He elected this role over the slugger's job to get on base They are paying tribute to hitters who have gotten 2,000 hits. Cobb got over 4,000 hits. He also stole close to 900 bases.

Babe Ruth was the power hitter. Babe might have been a .400 hitter just as Cobb might have been a slugger.

The two next greatest hitters I've ever seen in some 50 years of observation were Rogers Hornsby and Shoeless Joe Jackson.

Cobb — Ruth — Hornsby — Jackson. They are the four tops. After these—George Sisler. Sure anybody can be wrong. But what's the matter with Cobb, Ruth, Hornsby and Jackson?

They are the four tops in the land of the ash, in my book.

Jackson was a natural-born hitter, if you'll take the word of Cobb, Ruth and Speaker. Years ago on radio interviews each one told me that Jackson was the greatest hitter he had ever seen.

There is no questioning the fact now that Ralph Kiner is the biggest of the big hitters left. Kiner has averaged 48 home runs a year in the last four seasons.

He may raise this to 50 by the end of the 1951 campaign. Gil Hodges will need another 25 homers to protect his earlier lead.

Yet when Mize was close to 35, he tied Kiner two years running at 51 and 40. Ted Williams is a big hitter, but he isn't a Kiner. No one else is.

The Matter of Class

Several queries have arrived lately along this line: how does the heavyweight division of Sharkey, Carnera, Baer and Braddock compare with the 1951 mixture.

There isn't any big difference except that the modern heavyweights mentioned are more interesting and have more varied personalities. Sharkey and Baer were equipped to be high-class heavyweights, but disliked the game.

The top men today—Walcott, Charles, Louis and Marciano, plus La Starza and possibly Layne—are a queer mixture. Joe Louis was one of the greatest of all ring men—a great fighter in his day and prime. Walcott carries the greatest sympathetic appeal boxing has known in years. His average isn't too hot. He has knocked out Charles and, many feel, he has beaten Louis

AFL Breaks With Farm Agencies; Gen. Eisenhower Reports on Europe

AFL BREAKS TIES—Farmers and farm workers across the nation were pondering the sudden action of the American Federation of Labor obviously aimed at breaking off its heretofore friendly relations with the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange.

Meeting at Montreal, Canada, the AFL's executive council issued a statement which charged that the labor organization could no longer "appease" these farm groups because they had swung "to the side of reaction" in national affairs.

"In fact, on economic issues of vital concern to the national welfare," the statement said, "it has become difficult to discern any major difference between the policy of the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange on the one hand, and that of the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce on the other."

The AFL then pointed out that "labor cannot go on indefinitely supporting legislation beneficial to farmers while their organizations maintain a policy of seeking punitive anti-labor legislation."

The AFL made it clear that it was disappointed in the action of the farm groups in teaming up with "big business" representatives to defeat the enactment of effective anti-inflation controls. This would seem to be the opening shot in a civil war between two big segments of the nation's economy.

REPORT ON EUROPE—One of the clearest reports the home towns of the country have received on western Europe's growing strength was made last week by a senate subcommittee after a 14-day visit with Gen. Dwight Eisenhower.

Ike and Rosenberg

Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, assistant defense secretary, is greeted by Gen. Eisenhower at SHAPE headquarters near Paris. Mrs. Rosenberg is discussing manpower with the Allied supreme commander.

The committee reported Eisenhower as saying "it is almost ridiculous for us to be talking in terms of fright and hysteria" in the face of the free world's overwhelming strength.

The committee reported: (1) Eisenhower's headquarters is dissatisfied with the fact that western Europe has increased its armed forces only 20 per cent since the Korean war began. (They have promised a 75 per cent increase next year); (2) Spain and Yugoslavia should be brought into the "master plans" for defense of Europe; (3) Once European military build-up is complete, it will be possible "to begin the gradual withdrawal of U. S. forces"; (4) There is dissatisfaction among U.S. field representatives at the "multiheaded command" in Washington over political, economic, and military operations; (5) It will cost about $1,000,000,000 in France alone to erect the "overhead" for combat operations; (6) Without U.S. leadership Europe by now might have fallen before Communism; (7) Economic aid must be "primarily for the purpose of assisting friendly countries to strengthen their individual and collective defenses"; (8) It is most important that east-west trade shall not be permitted to increase the war potential of the Soviet Union.

RED BUILD-UP—While Allied and Communist representatives negotiate a cease-fire at Kaesong, with increasing prospects for success, the Reds have taken the opportunity to carry out a big military build-up in Korea.

Observers are now wondering if the Communists are planning a new offensive if the Kaesong armistice talks collapse, or are they pouring in troops merely to strengthen the hand of their negotiators?

Many are inclined to belive it means a new offensive. They point out that unusually heavy truck traffic through North Korea toward the front, started at the first mention of armistice talks late in June and continued through mid-July.

There is an entirely new vigor in the North Korean army, observers point out, and Communist artillery has become more plentiful and bolder. Red prisoners and deserters invariably talk about plans for a "new offensive". In the past they have usually been right.

THE WHEAT CROP—In a new crop forecast, the department of agriculture predicts this year's wheat crop will fall below a billion bushels for the first time since 1943. This was a decrease of 72 million bushels from its July 1 forecast. However, the department said, the indicated crop, plus reserves, would be more than ample to meet needs.

Floods and dry weather last month was credited with cutting the crop to an estimated 998 million bushel harvest. Several million acres of wheat, corn, barley, flaxseed and potatoes were destroyed by mid-west floods. The year's corn estimate was lowered to 3,206 million bushels, 89 million bushels below last month's predictions.

REDS TO ATTEND—Although the Soviet Union has announced she will send delegates to attend 50-nation Japanese peace treaty conference in San Francisco September 4, the Russian delegation is expected to refuse to sign the document.

The Russians have bitterly condemned the proposed treaty draft as illegal and a device for tying an "aggressive" satellite Japan to the United States.

By attending the conference the Russians will again have an opportunity to create world-wide propaganda. They can be expected to protest the treaty item by item.

A CITY COMES BACK—Nearly 17 million tons of mud, muck and debris have been shoveled aside in Kansas City as the flood-ravaged valleys of Missouri continue to make one of the nation's most remarkable comebacks.

Just three weeks after the flood waters had ebbed from the Kansas City stockyards, a consignment of shorthorn cattle pounded through the wooden pens to mark the reopening of the nation's second largest livestock market.

Three major packing plants are slaughtering again and more than 120 business firms have returned to offices evacuated during the flood. Although many families are still in dire need of relief and assistance, nearly 30,000 employees have returned to jobs washed out by the mid-July flood.

Throughout the flood-stricken area, it's been back to business for grain elevators, flour mills, farm machinery concerns, transfer companies, sheet metal works, motor parts firms, tractor and equipment companies, paint manufacturers, milling companies, a creamery and dairy supply company, soap manufacturers and lumber companies.

It has been a wonderful story of a city fighting its way back.

PRICE LAW VIOLATIONS

$10,000,000 Involved in Fifty Cases

The government is investigating 50 major cases of alleged price-ceiling violations that could result in the return of $10,000,000 to the government and consumers.

Price Enforcement Director Edward P. Morgan hinted that the cases involve some of the largest business concerns in the country. He said one case "has possible international ramifications and involves about $5,000,000 in illegal profits."

In many cases the price agencies are forcing firms found guilty of violations to make restitution to customers. In others, where there is no clear method for repayment to customers, money from settlements is paid to the United States treasury.

Esther Hartbeck Wed Gene Seim In Klemme Church

GRADUATE OF NURSING SCHOOL WILL LIVE AT MARSHALLTOWN

MR. AND MRS. GENE SEIM

At a candlelight ceremony in the Klemme Evangelical and Reformed Church on Saturday, September 1, 1951 at 7:30 p. m., Miss Esther Hartbeck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Hartbeck, became the bride of Mr. Gene B Seim, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Seim of Marshalltown. Rev. Vernon Jaberg read the double ring ceremony.

A prelude of nuptial music was played by Miss Deloris Tomlinson, who also played the traditional wedding marches and soft music during the ceremony.

Miss Alma Jene Dwight, roommate of the bride, at Marshalltown sang "Through The Years," and "The Lord's Prayer."

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a white satin gown styled with a full skirt, a tight bodice and a net yoke bordered with chantilla lace. Her matching finger-tip veil fell from a lace headband beaded with pearls. Her triple strand of pearls, gift of the groom, was her only jewelry. She carried and arm bouquet of yellow roses with white satin ribbon.

Mrs. Richard Ward of Marshalltown, was matron of honor. Her gown was of blue taffeta with net overskirt. She wore a shoulder-length veil of the same color and carried a bouquet of yellow and white gladioli.

The Misses Henrietta Allspach and LeAnn Meyer, friends of the bride, were bridesmaids. They were gowned in yellow formals with matching shoulder length veils. Each carried a bouquet of pastel gladioli.

Candles were lit by Lois Stille, friend of the bride and Marjorie Seim, sister of the groom. They wore pink formals and corsages of orchid and white asters.

The bridegroom and his best-man, Richard Ward, a close friend, both wore grey business suits with white carnation boutonniers.

Jack Elwood and Richard Edgington were ushers.

Both mothers were attired in brown dresses and wore yellow rose corsages.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the church parlor for 160 guests. The four-tier wedding cake at the bride's table was topped with a miniature wedding bell and love birds.

Mrs. Leland Hummel was in charge of the guest book. Miss Elizabeth Goll acted as dining room hostess and Miss Marilyn Schutte was in charge of the gifts.

Mrs. Stanley Stucynski, sister of the groom, cut and served the wedding cake and Mrs. Henry Bokelman, cousin of the bride, poured. Waitresses were Miss Esther Klinge and Miss Lillian Wille.

For going away the bride wore a Navy blue wool jersey dress with matching accessories. She is a graduate of the Klemme high school and a 1951 graduate of the Evangelical Deaconess Hospital in Marshalltown.

The groom graduated from the Marshalltown High School and is employed at the Iowa Electric Light & Power Co. The couple will reside in Marshalltown.

THORNTON PITCHER FANS 22 BATTERS IN 7-INNING GAME HERE

Don Winthers an oustanding pitcher for Thorton high school, pulled a rare feat here Friday when he fanned 22 batters in a 7-inning game as Thornton defeated Klemme 9-0 Winthers allowed only one hit in the game and no walks as he accounted for all the putouts via strikeouts. The reason he got 22 was that his battery mate, Lawrence Gruis, lost a 3rd strike one one Klemme batter Thornton had 10 hits in the game and each club was charged with two errors.

Chicken Tale

Don't You Believe It

This business of the "Rooster coming home to roost" is just a cover up, of actual happenings after the first article of his missing rooster I wondered what his second article would be so that the people wouldn't find out to what was actually happening.

It seems strange that Jergie should chase this chicken right near his back door and then give of the chase. I have found out the reason,

After the supposed rooster dissapeared—strange noises began to be heard at night, at first it was thought to be due to the wind or atmospherical conditions, but after listening for a short time it became more weird in fact it made one shudder. It seemed as though it was something from another planet.

Now I don't believe in spooks, but I was curious to find what was going on—what I saw would make the Pied Piper of the old story book an amature. Here was Jergie on the top of his back porch making the sounds, and it wasn't long before someone came walking down the alley with a chicken "his rooster" under the arm, opened the garage door and dissapeared. It wasn't long until the strange sounds stopped.

Figure it out for yourself no wonder he mentioned in his last paper he hoped that would be the end of the "rooster business.

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded business and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

"School Days, School Days," Yes, it's "back-to-school" time for thousands of Iowa children. And they'll be crossing streets and riding bikes to and from school every day.

That's why your Iowa Safety Congress warns motorists· Protect our Children!

Last year, 130 Iowa school-age children were killed and more than 5500 were injured in traffic accidents. Many of these tragic deaths and injuries occurred while the youngsters were on their way to and from school.

When driving be prepared for childrens' unpredictable actions not merely in school zones, but in all residential sections. And be especially careful during school "rush hours"—8 to 9 in the morning, over the noon hour, and after 3.30 in the afternoon.

Give children the right-of-way to long life—teach them safe walking and bike riding rules, obey the signals of safety patrol boys, and stop for all school buses.

Remember: Slow up and let them grow up!

'Safety First'

"SAFETY FIRST" HAS BEEN DEMONSTRATED BY TWO KLEMME FARMERS

At least two Klemme farmers in the Klemme community are to be commended for their "Safety First" project. Both the Carl Wille and Ed Blanchett have eliminated blind corners at their farms by cutting off the tops of corn stalks in their corn fields at road intersections

The farmers said it only took a little effort to do the job, that it does not injure the corn, and it gives motorists a better view of approaching traffic. It would be fine if more farmers would help along this same line. It might save several lives.

CORNER STORE HAS BEEN REDECORATED

Friday evening after closing time Mr. and Mrs. Glen Ternufen, assisted by several friends, repapered the interior of the Corner Store. The new paper looks bright and cheerful and adds to the neat appearance of the store.

Tar Trouble ?

A CAN OF ROOFING TAR MIXED WITH THREE BOYS SPELLS TROUBLE

A boyish prank back-fired here last week when three boys, who found a can of roofing cement thought it would be fun to add some artistic decorations to a No U-Turn sign on Main street, add a gob to the drinking fountain and leave some dabs on the park benches along the street.

It didn't pan out to be so funny after Mayor Cook had the boys rounded up to remove the tar. Denny Ridder, Johnnie Bisom and Dick Dulmes got busy Saturday evening to remove the tar they had previously dabbed here and there. They had plenty of advise from the "curb stone" engineers who had gathered to see them sweat and work, and to watch the fun.

In addition to having to remove the tar, the Mayor also sentenced the boys to 30 days—that is 30 days off the streets every night after 8.00 o'clock.

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

"It will be hard traveling with Amy," Mary Peterson told her neighbors, "but it's been so long since we've had a vacation."

All through the preparations for the trip, Mary fretted over the prospect of keeping two-year old Amy entertained through the long days of hard driving that would take up most of the vacation.

Finally, Jim, her husband, suggested that they take his mother along. There would be plenty of room and Grandma would be more than glad to help with the baby.

So, when the Petersons pulled away from their small home in an Iowa city early one morning, Grandma was in the back, sitting among a litter of toys telling Amy about all the cows and horses they would see along the way.

During the next two days, as the trip settled down to a mile-for-mile grind, they did see a lot of cows and horses. And little Amy shrieked at all of them.

Like most grandmothers, the older Mrs. Peterson was made of pretty durable stuff where children were concerned and she stuck happily to her post in the back seat caring for Amy

But once in a while, when the child was quiet, she would doze off. She was sleeping lightly when Jim took a curve too fast and Amy was thrown against the right rear door - the door that had never closed securely since a slight accident 6 months before.

She woke to hear Mary scream, to feel the car screeching to a stop, to see the horror of an open door and no child. Amy was already dead, a small, dusty figure huddled at the edge of the highway.

"It will be so hard traveling with Amy," Mary Peterson had said. It was going to be infinitely harder, traveling back without her.

Variety Pancakes Make Main Dish or Dessert For Lunch or Supper

FEEL LIKE WHIPPING up a batch of pancakes and tossing them on the griddle? You'll have fun and so will the folks who sit down to eat them.

There's more to pancakes than just making them plain and serving with butter and syrup, as is customary for breakfast. They go nicely for family or company lunches or suppers when they're dressed a bit with foods to make them richer for the heavier meals.

Here are pancakes which are sprinkled with shredded cheese after baking. Try them with creamed mushrooms and a mound of asparagus:

Luncheon Pancakes with Creamed Mushrooms
(Serves 6)

Creamed Mushrooms:
- ¼ pound fresh mushrooms
- ¼ cup butter
- ¼ cup flour
- 2 cups milk
- Salt to taste

Clean and slice mushrooms. Melt butter in skillet, add mushrooms and cook covered, stirring occasionally, until mushrooms are tender, about 5 minutes. Add flour and stir until blended. Add milk and stir constantly until sauce boils and thickens.

Add salt and place over boiling water until ready to use.

Pancakes:
- 3 cups all-purpose flour
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 4 teaspoons baking powder
- 4 eggs
- 2⅔ cups milk
- ⅓ cup melted butter
- 2 cups shredded cheese

Sift flour, measure; sift with salt and baking powder. Beat eggs thoroughly in large mixing bowl; add milk and melted butter. Add dry ingredients all at once and beat until batter is smooth. Bake on a lightly greased griddle, allowing about ¼ cup batter for each cake. Bake until golden brown on one side; turn and brown on the other side. Turn only once. Arrange hot cakes on cookie sheet in stacks of three, with cheese sprinkled between them and keep hot in a warm oven. When ready to serve, top with a pat of butter and serve with hot creamed mushrooms.

IF YOU MAKE your own soup from a soup bone, you'll always have a little meat left on the bone. This can be ground and used as a filling for pancakes to be served with the soup, thus giving you a complete main dish that's sure to please.

Filled Pancakes

- 1 cup milk
- 3 eggs
- 1 cup ground meat (from soup bone)
- 1 egg yolk
- 1 cup minced onion
- 2 tablespoons butter
- Bread crumbs

Sift flour, measure, then sift together with salt and baking powder. Add milk and 3 eggs, well beaten, and mix to a smooth batter. Bake in thin cakes on a greased skillet. Let cool. Mix meat with egg yolk and 1 egg.

Season with salt and pepper to taste. Saute onion in butter, add meat mixture and cook 2 minutes. Spread on pancakes and roll tightly. Beat remaining egg. Dip rolled pancakes in egg, then in crumbs and fry in skillet in hot fat until well browned. Serve with bouillon or other thin meat soup.

Beat eggs until foamy; add milk, flour, salt and sugar. Beat well. Melt 1 teaspoon butter in 9-inch skillet, tilting to cover bottom entirely. Pour ¼ of the egg mixture into hot skillet, covering surface evenly. Cook until firm enough to roll. Slip pancake from skillet onto a clean cdloth; spread with jam and pears and roll.

Swedish Pancakes
(Serves 6)
- 3 eggs
- 1 cup milk
- 1½ cups sifted flour
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ cup cream
- 2 tablespoons melted butter
- 2 cups berry sauce
- Confectioners' sugar

Beat eggs until very light. Add half the milk and fold in flour sifted with sugar and salt. Add cream, butter and remaining milk. Bake in large cakes on a hot griddle. Place 2 tablespoons of sauce on each and roll. Sprinkle with confectioners' sugar and serve. To make berry sauce, use canned or cooked berries, sweetened to taste and thickened with a small amount of cornstarch mixed with water.

Stacks of rich pancakes topped with butter pats, floating in a cream sauce with mushrooms make a nutritious, simple to prepare main dish for luncheon or supper. Additional protein is provided by sprinkling shredded cheese on the pancakes.

LYNN SAYS:

Don't Let Spoilage Boost Food Costs

A good place for eggs is the vegetable crisper if you have the room. Eggs should be covered as their shells are porous, and therefore evaporate easily.

Store tomatoes, berries, grapes, pears, peaches, apricots and plums right on the refrigerator shelves to allow for free circulation of the cold air. All other fruit should be placed in the crisping container.

Leafy vegetables all do best with moist cold. Crisping pans are ideal for these as are sealed vegetable bags or moisture-proof wrappings such as aluminum foil or plastic bags.

Always remove meat from its wrappings when you bring it home from the store. Heavy paper prevents the cold of the refrigerator from reaching the meat and also absorbs valuable meat juices. Place unwrapped meat on a platter and cover lightly with waxed paper.

THE HOME TOWN REPORTER IN WASHINGTON

WALTER SHEAD, WNU Correspondent

Lack of Honor

FEELING in Washington over ouster of 90 West Point cadets for cheating runs all the way from outright condonement, to criticism of both cadets and the West Point honor system, and suggestion that the army and navy academies be converted into graduate schools to train officer candidates graduated from other universities.

Concensus, however, runs like this—that cheating cannot be condoned and it's too bad the boys were caught, but the honor system puts too much strain upon the students and should be modified.

The fact is there can be no appeasement with evil. There already is too much of a tendency to modify honor systems because of the strain, to become complacent over cheating in business, in government and in our private and public lives. There is a senate committee right now groping around in a vacuum seeking some ethical standards or honor code for government employees. But the sad fact is there appears to be little honor in the senate.

West Point cadets who cheat were held unfit for further association with the student body and fired. But United States senators who cheat, or flout the moral or honor code are still accepted members of that "exclusive club, the world's greatest deliberative body." As one writer expressed it, "The unfortunate cadets fired for cheating can still look forward to becoming United States senators."

Freshman Sen. John Marshall Butler of Maryland was found guilty by a vote of 9 to 3 of the senate judiciary committee of having conducted a disgraceful campaign, "a despicable back-street campaign . . . using methods and tactics which are destroying our system of free elections and tend to undermine the very foundation of our government." And yet the senate committee did not find that Senator Butler should be ousted as unfit to further associate with his colleagues in that august body.

The committee report used up four pages to tell what heinous smearing, and libelous and slanderous and unlawful methods "destructive of fundamental American principles" were used by Sen. Joseph McCarthy in the Butler campaign.

McCarthy Replies

It remained for Sen. William Benton of Connecticut to introduce a resolution in the senate first calling upon McCarthy to resign, and then calling for his ouster by the senate. McCarthy's reply was that Senator Benton was a Communist tool.

That is his stock reply to all who are American enough to believe in the four freedoms and the Bill of Rights and who oppose irresponsible demagoggery in a United States senator. That's what McCarthy calls Secretary of State Dean Acheson and Secretary of Defense George Marshall, Washington Post and the St. Louis Post Dispatch, and other newspapers which have shown McCarthyism for what it is.

Senate to Do Nothing

The chances are the senate will not have the intestinal fortitude to uphold its own honor and the honor system by expulsion of the Wisconsin senator, who has disgraced the enviable record set in the senate by his predecessors, the LaFollettes, father and son. It takes two-thirds votes to expel a member and the senate is jealous of its power to expel and it has been used with restraint.

The chances are that a majority of the members may agree that McCarthy is an odium difficult to stomach, but, he is first of all the problem of the people of Wisconsin who have a chance at him next year when he is up for election. It will be interesting to note what happens then.

Tideland Oil

And speaking of the honor system, when Albert Fall as secretary of the interior, took a bribe for bartering away the nation's oil reserves, he was a piker. The amount of oil involved was relatively small as compared with what is going on in Congress today in the tidelands oil controversy. For this Congress is expected to barter away potential federal oil reserves believed to be as high as 11 billion barrels in the Gulf and 2 billion barrels off California coast.

Lobbyists Active

Washington is swarming with oil lobbyists, representing the private companies and the states involved including California, Texas, Louisiana and Florida, in the audacious effort to overturn three decisions of the U.S. supreme court which says that the oil beneath the seas beyond low tide mark belongs to all the people of the nation, not to the states involved, and that the federal government has paramount right, authority over this oil.

Churches Unite

Lesson for September 16, 1951

MORE THAN 200 different denominations of the Christian church exist in the United States alone. Several of these claim to be the one and only "true" church, but even those that do not make this claim are sufficiently pleased with themselves to stay on as separate denominations. Some Christians find this division of Christendom a scandal and a sin. Others find it the glory of Protestant Christianity that it has freedom and room for so many varieties of Christian faith. Has the Bible anything to say about this?

Dr Foreman

The Mother of All Churches

You will not find such words as "denomination" in the New Testament. Such words as Episcopalian, Lutheran, Baptist (referring to a church), Presbyterian, Mennonite, Roman Catholic, or other modern tags, are not to be found in the Scriptures.

All the same, our lesson passages give us some important suggestions. Luke tells how horrified the disciples were at discovering some one not of their own organization, doing good work in Jesus' name. They would have stopped him; but Jesus said, "He that is not against us is for us."

That is a good way to think about other Christian churches. The story in Acts 11 tells how churches in the earliest times helped one another in various ways. II Cor. 9 shows how the good example of one church can be a challenge to others to do still better.

As that Jerusalem meeting handed down a decision affecting many congregations and persons, so now the findings and decisions of great bodies of churches have a weight and an importance far beyond what might be said by single congregations. That council was the mother of all councils as the New Testament church was the mother of all churches.

All Christians Are Brothers

IN HIS first letter to that problem-church of Corinth, their first pastor Paul urges the different parties in the church to remember above all that they are Christ's people rather than any one's else. The name of Christ is far more important than any of our denominational labels.

In his letter to the Philippians Paul says an even more striking thing. "I know that some are preaching Christ out of jealousy, to annoy me . . . but what does it matter? The fact remains that Christ is being preached, whether sincerely or not, and that fact makes me very happy."

In America today we are beginning to catch the New Testament spirit. Taking the situation as a whole, there is more get-together-ness than fly-apart-ness among the churches. Cooperation is taking many forms. Locally in communities, or in state-wide interdenominational associations, or on a national scale, churches are doing together what separate churches or denominations would find difficult or impossible.

Besides recent large mergers of denominations such as the union of Methodists north and south, the Evangelical United Brethren, the Evangelical and Reformed, and Congregational-Christian, there are many other groupings of like-minded churches, pooling their resources for evangelism, education, missionary work and many other purposes.

Message to the People

THE largest and most impressive get-togethers are the National Council of Churches of Christ in America which includes every large American denomination but two; and the great World Council of Churches with member-churches in every Christian land.

These words from the first message of the National Council to the people of America ring out the spirit of unity growing today: "This council has been constituted by 29 churches for the glory of God and the well-being of humanity. It manifests our oneness in Jesus Christ as divine Lord and Savior; his is the mandate we obey and his the power on which we rely. Our hope is in him. In him we see the solution of the world's ills. The council itself is a demonstration of his power to unite his followers in joyous cooperation."

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by ROGER C. WHITMAN

Question: Several times I have plastered bad parts of rooms and each time, try though I may, cracks appear in the plaster upon drying. I have tried retarding the drying, wetting the lath, but to no avail. Can you help me? Also, please tell me how to mix this plaster and in what proportion?

Answer: If you are not trying to replaster an entire room, merely to patch up some cracks or other bad places, I advise you to get a prepared patching plaster which needs only to be mixed with water to make a paste. This is slower drying than plaster of Paris, which hardens too rapidly to be easily worked. (Glue dissolved in the mixing water will slow the time of hardening; so will vinegar, mixed half and half with the water.) If the patching job has been done correctly and cracks reappear, particularly around window and door openings, it is possible that structural weakness is the cause. If so, the defect should be located and corrected.

Question: My husband is remodeling the kitchen, using tileboard for the ceiling. The bathroom is directly above. Whenever water is spilled on the floor it leaks down into the kitchen. We have tried caulking around the fixtures, with little success. What can we do about it?

Answer: The bathroom should have a good waterproof floor covering, such as clay tile, asphalt tile or linoleum. Until you do this, you will continue to have leaks.

HADACOL RELIEVES THAT TIRED FEELING, SAYS MR. HARRY ADKINS OF CALIFORNIA

HADACOL Helps Folks With Tired, Run-Down Conditions When Due to Deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron

Mr. Harry Adkins, who lives at 5242 Vesper Drive, Van Nuys, California, says he used to feel tired and run-down at the end of a day's work. Now most everybody has to work these days, but it's not necessary to feel tired and drained of energy at the end of the day. For HADACOL can help if you feel tired and run-down when due to a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron in the system. Mr. Adkins says he started taking HADACOL and now feels much better—is no longer tired-out at the end of the day and has more energy.

Here is what Mr. Adkins says: "I had been feeling run-down and tired. About three months ago I started taking HADACOL. I had heard about it and how it had helped so many people, so I decided to try it to see if it would help me. After just a short time of taking HADACOL I could tell that I was feeling better. I no longer felt so tired after a day's work—just seemed to have more energy. I think HADACOL is a good product and I recommend it. I take it regularly each day to relieve that tired-out feeling at the end of the day, and it really does work."

Mr. Harry Adkins

HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of that tired, run-down feeling when due to the lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin in the system.

AND EVEN MORE IMPORTANT! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps prevent this condition from returning when due to such deficiencies. Now, that's the kind of product you have been waiting for. That's the kind you should buy and start taking at once. And HADACOL is so easy to take—comes in pleasant liquid form and is so easily and quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work for you immediately.

HADACOL Is So Effective

Because HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ and to every part of your body. You may have tried other Vitamin preparations or other Vitamin and Mineral preparations, so we make you this offer. Try a bottle of HADACOL today if you need Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron. You be the judge. If you do not believe that HADACOL is the best Vitamin and Mineral preparation you have ever taken, we will gladly send you back your money. HUNTING SEASONS ANNOUNCED

The State Conservation Commission has announced the 1951 pheasant, quail, rabbit and squirrel seasons with very little change in the regulations from last year. Changes include raising the rabbit limit from 6 to 10, removal of possession limit on rabbits, increasing the length of the short season on pheasants two days, adding 9 counties to the short open pheasant season zone, and placing 5 long season pheasant counties in the short zone. Dallas and Polk were placed in the short season quail zone.

The pheasant season opens November 11 with shooting hours from 12:00 noon to 4:30 p. m. The bag limit is three cock birds with a possession limit of three cock birds.

In the long season in 65 counties, 25 open days have been declared with the season closing December 5. In 27 counties in the short zone, shooting closes November 22. All except seven counties in the southeast corner of the state are open to pheasant shooting.

The pheasant census indicates that the pheasant population is about the same as the previous year, with some shifting of heaviest densities. The heaviest centers of population are in the northern three tiers of counties through the western two-thirds of the state.

The quail season has been set exactly as in 1950, except that Dallas and Polk counties have been added to the short season zone, opening November 1st to December 15, both dates inclusive, in the long zone, and Nov 1 to 15 in the short zone, both dates inclusive. Shooting hours are from 8.30 a m to 4:30 p m. with a bag limit of 6 and a possession limit of 6 Quail censuses indicate that the quail population is approximately the same as in 1950.

The rabbit season opens on September 15, 1951 and closes January 31, 1952. Shooting hours are from 6:00 a. m. to 6.00 p m Daily bag limit is 10 with no possession limit.

Rabbit counts indicate as much as a 50 per cent increase in the number of cottontails over 1950. Possession limit was removed from cottontails as a result of the Attorney General's ruling that the Conservation Commission, under present law, does not have the authority to establish a possession limit on rabbits.

The squirrel season opens September 15 and closes November 15, with daily bag limit of 6 and a possession limit of 12. The season is exactly the same as in 1950 and squirrel censuses indicate very little or no change in the squirrel population.

Prairie Warbler
©National Wildlife Federation

You might think that the best place to look for Prairie Warblers is in the wide open prairie country. But if you try to spot them there, you will be disappointed. Despite their name, Prairie Warblers don't go any farther west than the eastern fringe of Nebraska.

Most of them, the National Wildlife Federation reports, stay in the east and south. In the summer, they are found in Florida and Mississippi, and northward to Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and New England.

In this region, they like to live in brushy country where low trees grow. There is also a good chance of finding them in a dry, barren pasture. They stay away from thick forests and wet, swampy places.

After choosing a summer home, a pair of Prairie Warblers sets about to build a nest in a small tree or a low bush. At a point about four feet off the ground, the parent birds construct a dwelling of plant stems, bark, and leaves, with softer materials for a lining. They often use cobwebs to tie the larger pieces together.

The nest is finished by May, which is egg-laying time for the Prairie Warblers. The female lays three, four, or five small, greenish-white eggs which are spotted with purple or brown. After she sits on them fourteen days, they hatch.

With hungry young mouths to fill, both parents get busy at the job of collecting food. The entire family lives on insects of all kinds, and each day they devour hundreds of bugs. Throughout the summer, they are a big help in destroying harmful pests.

The young Prairie Warblers thrive on their share of the food, and they are ready to leave the nest in July. By the end of the month, the family may begin its journey to the south, though it may wait until nearer fall. No later than Sept., all Prairie Warblers are bound for their winter homes in Florida and in the West Indies.

By this time, the young birds are beginning to look a little like their parents. The adult male is plain and dull on top, except for a few chestnut spots. Underneath, though, he is bright yellow, with some streaks of black on his sides. There are also two black marks near each eye. He is a fairly small bird—only four and a half to five inches long.

When they sing, the Prairie Warblers seem to be saying "Zee-zee-zee-zee-zee zee." Each "zee" is a note higher than the one before it, making the birds sound as though they were practicing a scale.

Another interesting fact about the Prairie Warbler, according the the National Wildlife Federation, is that it wags its tail.

For interesting information about other wildlife species, write to the National Wildlife Federation, Washington 10, D. C.

VERN H. LEAR PRESIDENT

Vern H. Lear of Cedar Rapids has been named a vice president of the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company according to an announcement from Sutherland Dows, president of the utility.

Mr. Lear, who was formerly city manager at Newton, joined the Iowa Electric Company in 1928. In 1940 he became general manager of the Municipal Light and Water department of Muscatine. In 1948 he returned to the Iowa Electric Company and was made general superintendent of that company and the Central States Electric Company. In May of 1951 he was named assistant to the president of these two companies.

Now that the Central States Electric Company has been merged with the Iowa Electric Light and Power Company Mr. Lear's new appointment places him in charge of all commercial activities for the combined companies. He will also continue as assistant to the president of the Iowa Electric Company.

Eyeglass Wearing Today Not Like Yesteryear

Nearly 100 million Americans are wearing spectacles tocay, the Better Vision Institute reports. And these modern eyeglasses not only act as seeing aids but they look good.

They are a far, far cry from the glasses invented by Italy's Salvino del Armati 665 years ago, and from those framed in wood, bone, leather, and other materials in the centuries that followed.

The Florentine's eyeglasses swiftly gained favor, and by the year 1300 Venetians were sending spectacles to customers throughout Europe—customers who could afford their high prices. By that time, the Chinese—who had probably invented spectacles independently—were making many pairs. The Chinese made tortoise-shell rims because they considered the tortoise a sacred animal whose shell would bring long life and good luck. As glasses were used in China for reading, they became the badge of scholars and aristocrats, and even lensless rims were sometimes worn as a symbol of position.

The invention of printing in 1440 brought eyeglasses into more widespread use in the western world. For more than two centuries, itinerant peddlers roved the roads of Europe with trays of spectacles marked "young" or "older." There were no prescriptions or adequate examinations then. Not until about 1700 were glasses fitted to the individual, and even then examinations were pretty primitive.

Candy Came Long Way From Sugar-Coated Pill

The little sugar-coated pill has come a long way.

A penny's worth of candy used to keep a youngster happy for quite a while. And an old-fashioned "taffy pull" was lots of work, but well worth it. It's a different story today. The national sweet tooth has come into its own, and Grandma's fudge kettle has turned into a $365,000,000 a year business.

It all really started some 500 years ago in the English apothecary shops, ancestors of our drugstores. About that time, apothecaries began using sugar to coat their pills. Before long, the sugar-coated medicine became so popular that the medicine was left out and the pills were manufactured with sugar only.

Descendants of the old English medicated sweetmeats can now be bought in more than two thousand different forms or varieties. Candy counters and sweetshops in the United States annually sell over two billion pounds of confections.

Migraine Headaches

Doctors believe that attacks of migraine headaches can be shortened by starting treatment as soon as trouble begins. About 5 per cent of the nation's population is affected by migraine headaches, although it ranks only about third as a cause of headaches. They occur two to three times more frequently in women than in men. Migraine headaches, will last anywhere from thirty minutes to three or four days, are restricted to one side of the head, and can occur on either half in an alternating manner. The headaches are described as causing a dull, throbbing, piercing pain often accompanied by nausea, exhaustion, depression, nervousness and blurring of vision. Migraines are associated with certain personality characteristics since "thinkers" rather than "doers" are generally affected by them. Typical victims of migraine attacks are meticulous housewives and overambitious, perfectionistic men with an exaggerated sense of responsibility.

Our Sense of Taste

It is believed that the tongue has specific sense organs which respond to different chemicals. According to the classical view there are four types of such taste receptors, each with their own nerve fibers, through which impulses are sent to the brain. One type is for sour, one for sweet, one for salt and one for bitter; our taste sensations being made up of various combinations of these fundamentals. The exact process by which a particle of matter stimulates the nerve endings is not known.

Persecute Christians

One aspect of the Korean war of particular concern to religious leaders is the manner in which the Communist armies are reported to have singled out Christians as special targets of persecution and retaliation. According to a report in the Pusan Christian Times, 20,000 Christians, including priests and pastors, have been slain by the North Korean Communists since the beginning of the war.

Indoor Air Purifier

A new household air purifier which utilizes short wave ultraviolet rays to change oxygen into ozone, "nature's own air freshener," has been developed by Roy C. Stove and Company, Chicago. The aluminum unit plugs into any AC outlet and is said to destroy unpleasant odors with electronically produced ozone.

KENNETH LEROY WADDINGHAM

Kenneth LeRoy Waddinham, the second son of Arnet and Irene Waddingham, was born at Mason City on April 21, 1946 He lived the slightly over five years of his life on the two farms operated by his parents near Klemme. He died on Monday evening, September 3rd, in Mercy Hospital, Mason City from injuries suffered in an automobile accident the day before.

He is survived by his parents and four brothers, John Timothy, Michael Arnet, Richard Allen and Terry Lynn. Also surviving are his paternal grandmother, Mrs Anna Waddingham of Garner, and his maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Suckow of Klemme as well as a large number of other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted in the Klemme Methodist Church on Saturday afternoon with Rev. E. Morris Egeland in charge. Mrs Vern Bisom and Mrs. James Carlson sang, "Safe In The Arms Of Jesus, and "Precious Jewells" accompanied at the organ by Maurice Jacobs.

Serving as pall bearers for their little friend were Everett Anderson, Dennis Haefner, Robert Hoyt and Jimmy Karsjens. Interment was in the family lot at Memorial Park Cemetery, Mason City.

PAYS TO PUT NITROGEN ON BROMEGRASS STAND

Bromegrass, especially when it's grown for seed, needs large amounts of nitrogen.

That's why Marvin Anderson, extension agronomist at Iowa State College, suggests applying nitrogen fertilizer to the bromegrass stand this month. He says it usually pays to put on 40 to 60 pounds of actual nitrogen to the acre, particularly where there is not a legume growing with the bromegrass and on land that has grown a legume for 1 to 2 years. That application is equal to 120-180 pounds of ammonium nitrate per acre.

Anderson adds that the nitrogen fertilizer can be applied either in the spring or in the fall. The responses are about the same for either time

AN LAYING HOUSE WHILE IT IS EMPTY

After yearling hens have gone market and while pullets are range, the time is ideal to an up the poultry laying use.

One thorough cleaning each ear is a wise practice, says rank G. Wollney, extension pecialist at Iowa State College. When the poultry raiser cleans he empty house he has a bet-er chance of destroying infes-tations of parasites and disease organisms. And while the house is empty and clean he can take steps to get rid of rats, which cause many of the disease prob-lems in the farm flock.

Wollney suggests starting the clean-up by removing all lit-ter, cobwebs, dust and other loose material, and then scraping the caked manure from perches, roosts and feed and water stands. He recommends soacking the floor so it will be easier to completely remove tieghtly the packed material.

A strong lye solution—1 pound of lye to 10 to 15 gallons of water—will kill most disease organisms left by the old hens. Wollney recommends this solu-tion for cleaning the floor, feed-ers and waterers. He says it should be applied liberally and allowed to soak into cracks and crevices where organisms may be harbored. An old broom is a handy means of applying the lye solution.

The next step in the clean-up is application of a creosol disin-fectant, sprayed onto the side walls and roosts and forced in-to cracks and crevices. Then the house should be closed for several days so no free-flying birds can get in it, according to Wollney.

Wollney also suggests repair-ing broken windows and screens and repairing doors that don't fit properly before the pullets are brought in. These repairs, plus installing springs on the doors, will help make sure the flock will be fully confined in the laying house, he says.

HEARTY MEALS FOR HOT DAYS

Make Them Cool and Appetising—

There's no use getting hot and bothered in preparation for that family dinner hour on a sunbaked summer day. Not when you can serve up a meal like this—cool and refreshing, as well as hearty and easy to fix.

Who wants to eat a hot meal, in a hot kitchen or dining room on a hot summer's day?

Not you, especially if you're all heated up from canning, do-ing your housework, or often from just plain moving around. Not the children, who've prob-ably been playing out in the hot sunshine all day. And cer-tainly not the men folks who've put in a hard day's work in the fields.

You and our meal planning can do much to pep the family up—and keep yourself cool in the bargain, says Nelle Thomp-son, Iowa State College nutri-tionist.

It's as simple as taking the foods you would ordinarily eat and fixing them up in just a little different way, she says. Try getting up earlier in the morning, too, to do necessary baking, roast the meat or pre-pare a casserole dish. Energy is just as necessary in hot weather as it is in cold, so keep your meals hearty ones—even though not all the foods are hot.

Cooling Milk Drinks

Take milk for instance For variety, let the children help you fix it into milk-fruit, frost-ed chocolate drinks or between-meal egg nogs.

Most everyone wants to sink his teeth into a good piece of meat at least once a day Meat has a "staying" value that all hard-workers need. You might serve cold cuts arranged on a plate with cheese slices and a molded salad. Or serve some cold slices of the roast you pre-pared in the cool morning hours Since most people like at least one hot food at a meal, and the meat course is the one most of-ten elected to fill the bill, choose cuts that don't take too much cooking time. Or prepare a casserole early that needs only a short time in the oven before serving It's best to keep your range on limited duty during hot weather.

Hearty Salads

For salads, try some hearty ones the men will go for. They can be the main part of the meal if you use filling foods that really "stick to the ribs." Yet they can be cool and refresh-ing too. A roast beef salad, with radishes, onions, potatoes, let-tuce or cabbage and horse-radish dressing is good So is chicken, ham, veal or flaked fish with hard cooked eggs, olives, pickles and tomatoes. The bulletin "Good Salads" of-fers many other recipes that can help you. You may get it from your county extension director or by writing to Iowa State College

Ice Cream and Fruit Desserts

Those men folks may keep on requesting heavy pies and cakes for dessert But surprise them sometimes with a dessert just as good that's easier for you to fix. Number one on the list of hot weather desserts is ice cream Serve it often—and vary the toppings. It's an easy way to satisfy appetites and nutrition-al needs at the same time One topping you might like to try is warm apple sauce

Serve plentiful melons and fresh fruits, too. And Miss Thompson suggests that you add lemon juice and as much sugar as you like to sliced peach-es. This way they won't turn dark and the taste will be a little different, too.

Now plan to serve a bread or cereal with every meal, and your hot weather meal planning will be complete. Just relax and enjoy the meal you so easily prepared—maybe even let the family help you pack it off to a back yard or a favorite picnic spot. You'll feel better, and all the good food will give every-one added vigor to face what they can't change—the weather.

SHIFT TO COOL-WEATHER FLY-CONTROL CHEMICALS

Arrival of cool fall weather marks the time for switching chemicals in controlling flies on livestock and around livestock buildings.

Lindane, the chemical that has done such an effective job of controlling flies during hot weather, isn't as effective as DDT or methoxychlor during days when the temperature is below 90 degrees, according to Earle Raun, extension entomologist at Iowa State College.

Methoxychlor is the chemical recommended for use on dairy cows and inside dairy barns and milking houses during cool weather. Methoxychlor or DDT may be used on beef cattle and in beef cattle barns, choice of chemical depending on their prices.

Raun points out, however, that DDT should not be used on dairy cattle or in dairy barns or milk houses, and should not be used on beef cattle within 30 days of slaughter. There is chance of DDT residues remaining in milk or in the beef under these conditions

Use of chemicals without a good santitation program will lead to disappointing results, Raun reminds. Sanitation is the foundation stone upon which any successful fly control program must be built.

In fact, the entomologist points out that failures that have occured in farm fly control can be traced to poor sanitation. When flies are allowed easy access to breeding places, they can increase in numbers faster than chemicals can kill them off This is particularly true during a "good fly year" such as this one

GOOD MANAGEMENT SAVES EGG CLEANING

Clean eggs sell for a premium on most of Iowa's poultry markets, so getting higher quality eggs from the nest is becoming more important to farmers today.

Leonard Eggleton, extension poultryman at Iowa State College, says two methods are being used mainly on Iowa farms in marketing clean eggs The first of these is to use efficient equipment, maintain the proper housing conditions and to gather the eggs at least twice daily. The second method is to spend several hours each week washing the eggs

Survey of Flockowners

Extension poultrymen at the college recently conducted a survey of poultry flockowners in a northern Iowa farming area. Owners in that area kept records of the time spent in each of the steps required in marketing their eggs.

Poultry markets in the survey area, like many markets around the state, purchase eggs by the grade. Individual flockowners having about the same percentage of eggs in each of the top two grades showed wide variations in the methods used inobtaining their high quality eggs. Both of these top grades required clean eggs.

As an example, Eggleton reports on two flock owners in the survey area who had equal egg numbers in the top two grades and obtained approximately the same average price for each dozen eggs they sold. One of the flockowners had to clean only 5 percent of his eggs, which required 48 minutes a week. The other, however, had to spend 3 hours and 40 minutes each week cleaning 30 percent of his eggs in order to make the higher grade range. This extra time spent in cleaning the eggs was the result of poor marketing practices on the part of the second owner.

Good Housing Helps

By maintaining proper housing conditions it's possible to gather clean eggs from the nest, and do away with the time spent in washing the eggs. In the case used above, Eggleton says the difference in the time spent weekly ammounted to 3 hours, or 150 hours annually.

If the amount of money required to pay for these 150 hours of labor were spent in building darkened nests, dropping pits and proper egg handling equipment it would pay for itself within a few seasons It's still profitable though to wash the eggs, if it means they will bring a premium price. For this Eggleton recommends using lukewarm water and some type of a detergent.

INSULATING WATER PIPES PREVENTS "SWEATING"

"Sweating" which occurs on water pipes during humid weather may cause serious damage by rusting and corrosion, says Carroll E. Worlan, extension agricultural engineer at Iowa State College.

Worlan explains that the sweating is caused by condensation of moisture on the cold pipes and points out that it can be prevented by any of several different methods. Successful prevention depends on insulating the water pipe and covering it with vapor resistant coating, he says.

Can Be Purchased

Cylindrical split type wool insulating felt can be purchased in various thicknesses to fit standard pipe sizes. This type of pipe insulation is covered with a canvass jacket. It usually comes in 3-foot lengths that can be placed over the pipe and held in place with metal bands around the outside, Worlan continues.

A water vapor resistant covering should be applied over the canvas jacket. Where the appearance of the insulated pipe is important, paint may be used. Worlan recommends applying two coats of spar varnish aluminum paint and following that with one or two coats of paint of the desired color. For pipes in a damp basment, a fungicide mixed with the paint will prevent mildew, he adds.

Wrapping and sealing the canvas jacket with asphalt-impregnated paper makes an effective vapor barrier, as does applying two coats of asphalt paint, according to Worlan.

Another Method

Another method Worlan suggests is wrapping the water pipe with insulating tape to a thickness of about one-fourth inch. This, too, should have a vapor resistant material applied to the outside.

A one-fourth inch coating of thick paint mixed wth insulating material will also help prevent sweating, Worlan concludes.

CONTROL HOUSEHOLD ANT BY USING CHLORDANE

Household ants causing trouble to Iowa homemakers can be controlled by a 2 percent solution of chlordane, according to entomologists at Iowa State College.

Chlordane generally is available as a 2 per cent oil solution, or higher concentrated emulsions may be purchased and diluted down to 2 percent strength. The material may be sprayed on or applied with a paint brush. Likely areas in which to poison ants are around kitchen sinks, drain boards, cupboards, base boards, windowsills, door thresholds.

The entomologists caution against contaminating food or eating utensils when applying chlordane. Cupboards may be sprayed if the sprayed areas are covered with shelf paper after they are sprayed.

Safeguard that smile with MILK

Yes, milk is so essential to a winning smile, it contains precious nourishment that helps build bones, teeth and sturdy bodies for children—nourishment that means greater health and happiness at every age.

Doctors say—every youngster needs at least four glasses of milk a day. For adults, at least two or three glasses each day.

There's nothing more refreshing or satisfying—than a glass of cool, flavor-rich delicious MILK — nothing else that gives you so much nourishment, at such low cost.

INJURY BY SCREWWORM IS EASILY PREVENTED

Livestock is some parts of Iowa are being attacked by dreaded screwworms again this year

Reports have reached Iowa State College extension entomologists of a few cases of infestations by this parasite, which attacks the living flesh of livestock. And the entomologists have issued a warning for farmers to be on the lookout for the pests and be ready to fight back if the screwworms get a foothold in their herds.

According to Earle Raun, extension entomologist at the college, the screwworm fly is native to the southern and southwestern sections of the United States and does not overwinter as far north as Iowa. Although the flies may reach Iowa by migration, the infestations are more generally brought in with cattle from the South or Southwest. Once established in areas in Iowa, the flies will continue to cause trouble until freezing weather.

The adult screwworm flies start the injurious cycle by laying eggs on the dry edges surrounding wounds on livestock, such as from wire cuts, casteration or dehorning wounds, and the navels of newly-born calves. In 10 to 24 hours the egg hatch and the larvae move into the exposed flesh. The larvae attack the living flesh, causing great irritation and pain, and in some cases they cause the death of the animal. Other types of fly maggots live in livestock wounds, but all consume dead tissue. Only the screwworm larvae attack living flesh.

Raun says that screwworm injury can be easily prevented by periodic examination of livestock and treating flesh wounds with either of two effectives materials—U. S. Smear 62 or EQ 335. These smears will also kill the maggots working in wounds. He recommends treating casteration or dehorning wounds with one of the smears at the time of the operation to keep a step ahead of possible infestation.

CONDITION COWS BEFORE CALVING

Assures Bigger Milk Output After Calving

Iowa dairymen will soon be facing their most critical period in dairy management as the fall calving season approaches. With the arrival of the ideal calving time--September through November—comes the task of getting cows in proper condition prior to calving.

Floyd Arnold, extension dairyman at Iowa State College, says high condition is desirable at calving time if the cow is to produce at her maximum during the following lactation. When a cow begins producing milk the extra condition soon disappears. As a general rule, a good cow will produce more milk during the first month or two of her lactation period than can be produced from the feed she eats.

Fall Calving

It's especially important to have heifers bred so they will calve in the fall. About a month before calving time they should be brought in off pasture and put on a grain mixture. This will help them become accustomed to grain before calving and will aid in building up their bodies It also allows the heifers to become used to the barn and stanchions.

Arnold recommends a light, bulky, but highly nutritious ration for the heifers, one providing good condition without causing the udder to swell. If it does swell, you may wish to consider premilking--milking before the cow calves. It's not generally recommended, but if a high degree of congestion result in the udders of high producing cows or heifers, it might help to premilk.

The important thing to remember with older cows is to get them dry for a 6 to 8-week period before calving. Arnold says they may be forced dry by their grain away for a few days and by not milking them. If inflammation occurs in the udder, it should be milked out and a veterinarian summoned to clear it up.

Light Ration

Usually 4 to 5 pounds of grain daily is enough during the dry period. Then 10 days before freshening, the cows should be placed on a light ration, increasing the oats and bran and decreasing the corn. A ration of 5 parts ground oats, 4 parts of wheat bran and 1 part of cracked soybeans is good.

Dried beet pulp is an excellent feed to use before and after freshening, with plenty of water and a moderate amount of exercise necessary. If the weather is good one of the best places for calving is on the pasture. Cows should be isolated at calving time if they are diseased.

Care of the calf at calving time is just as important as caring for the cow. The navel should be disinfected with tincture of iodine, and the calf should be fed colostrum milk. Colostrum or the first milk is necessary for the calf and is usually produced in greater quantities than the calf can use. The excess may either be fed to other calves or frozen for later use.

Like Jason, Uncle Sam Quests "Golden Fleece"

As the U. S. begins its partial mobilization program, Uncle Sam is loosening his purse strings to enter the international market in an expensive quest for large supplies of wool, which today is truly the "golden fleece."

A compelling reason for the intensive buying program is indicated by the recent disclosure that the country has failed to build an adequate stockpile of wool to meet the present emergency. Meanwhile, prices for this vital commodity have soared to the highest level in history, notes the National Geographic Society.

Although practically every nation grows some wool, most of it comes from Southern Hemisphere countries—Australia, Argentina, New Zealand, South Africa and Uruguay. Australia is the world's leader, accounting for about one-fourth of the international supply. Large producers in the Northern Hemisphere are the United States, Great Britain, Spain, France and Italy.

But U. S. demand for wool has far outdistanced the domestic supply. The nation normally consumes about 800 million pounds annually; domestic sources yield little more than a fourth of that amount. At Boston, long a center of wool trade activity, prices in recent weeks have risen to as much as $3 a pound for certain good grades of cleaned wool.

CIVILIAN AIRLIFT

World's First Civilian 'Airlift' Supplies Huge Ore Development

The world's first civilian "airlift" of major proportions is now taking place in the barren wastelands of northern Quebec and western Labrador, where aircraft have really come into their own in the transportation of heavy industrial equipment.

Iron Ore Company of Canada is using "airlift" techniques to rush the development of its Knob Lake mines which lie in the desolate wasteland 320 air miles north of the St. Lawrence River port of Seven Islands, Quebec. With U. S. sources and reserves of top-grade iron ore dwindling at a rapid rate, the pressure of defense production demand for this essential mineral makes every hour count in the development and exploitation of these hitherto almost inaccessible mines.

Everything—mine site, camps, dams for electric power, highways, bridges, and a 350-mile railroad to bring out the ore—must be constructed from scratch. And construction equipment to do the job at Knob Lake must be hauled in by air over the barren, trackless wilderness. The "airlift" is the only possible solution, according to mine officials.

Largest aircraft in the lift is a Fairchild C-119 "Flying Boxcar." This big twin-engined cargo carrier has already flown fifteen big red International TD-14A crawler tractors from Seven Islands to Knob Lake. The tractors were shipped complete minus only their drawbars and track shoes and were driven on and off the plane under their own power. A capacity load for the "Flying Boxcar" is 16,000 lbs. on this trip, just a shade more than the weight of the tractors.

Even rubber-tired earthmoving scrapers of eight cubic-yard capacity for use with the tractors have been carried by the "Boxcar" without dismantling—with one inch to spare on each side.

The Knob Lake airstrip was started in 1747 by a small International crawler tractor, flown in, piece by piece, in a flying boat which was able to land on Knob Lake itself. Now about 5,000 feet long, the gravel airstrip easily handles Douglas C-47s and the Fairchild "Flying Boxcar." The little International TD-6 tractor first brought in is still working on road construction in the area.

TWO YEARS FROM now, the 350-mile railroad now under construction will reach Knob Lake from Seven Islands. In the meantime, the airlift supplies the mine development work at Knob Lake and supplies the construction camps building the railroad by means of two other airstrips along the line.

Hydro-electric power will be developed at two dams to supply power to the mines, railroad, townsites, and terminals. Scheduled for first construction is a dam at the rapids of Lake Menihek, which will be of the earth-fill type and will act as a bridge for the railroad. Generating capacity of the power plant at this dam will be 30,000 hp., scheduled for delivery in 1953. The second dam, also of 30,000 hp., will supply power to the ore docks and rail terminal at the town of Seven Islands.

When operations are in full swing, I.O.C. expects to produce 10 million tons a year, with production, transportation, and dock facilities designed for twice that tonnage. But before a ton of ore is moved, close to 200 million dollars will have been invested in the project by that time, about half of the money going for railroad construction.

THE FICTION CORNER

PINKY

By Sallydale Wimbrow

JULIA WARREN looked up from her pie-baking suddenly, and thought it had happened.

"Bud," she called. "Please try to keep Pinky by your side. He'll get hurt if he keeps chasing cars the way he does."

She watched Bud through her kitchen window as he scolded Pinky by waving a fat finger at him. "Mustn't do, Pinky! Mom says you're a bad dog!" Then he pushed along the sidewalk in his wagon, Pinky at his side.

3-Minute Fiction

Julia went back to baking her apple pie, a worried look on her face. Pinky was lovable, but his habit of chasing cars through the streets of Collinsville made Julia dread the event which must inevitably occur. Julia had urged her husband Mark to persuade Bud to give up the dog, but Mark was too soft-hearted.

"It will break the boy's heart," he would say.

Not nearly as badly as it would if something dreadful happened to Pinky, Julia always thought. That could be something Bud might never get over. That might be something he would always remember like a sharp continuous pain. Julia knew well it would be that way.

She tried to cast thoughts from her mind that were like jagged glass. She opened the oven door, saw that the pie was almost brown enough to take out.

Then she heard it—heard it like she knew she would, like she had heard it once before in the recesses of her mind. Bud's scream, a car's futile brakes, Pinky's agonizing bark.

All she could hear then were Bud's sobbing words: "Pinky! Pinky!"

Musn't do, Pinky! Mom says you're a bad dog!"

They buried Pinky in a small wooden box in a corner of the back yard among the flowers. Julia put a marker with Pinky's name into the ground while Bud just watched and said nothing.

Julia did not know whether there was more sorrow than relief in her heart. Maybe it was better that it happened now instead of five or six years from now when Bud's love for Pinky would have been too hard for the boy to forget. Bud could forget Pinky now as she had learned to forget . . .

AT dinner that night there were not many words spoken. Mark patted his son's curly head, and tried to console him. "Pinky wouldn't like to see you so sad, son. He'd want you to remember him with a smile on your face, and forget what happened today."

Forget . . . forget. Julia looked at Bud's face and knew he would never forget. Young minds don't forget easily. They don't forget the most important things. Julia knew.

After dinner when the family was in the living room, Mark reading his paper, Bud playing listlessly with his blocks, Julia suddenly put down the sweater she was knitting. She got up from her chair and went towards the door.

"What's wrong, Julia?" Mark asked alarmed.

"Nothing, dear. I must get some air. I think I'll see Helen Reynolds for a few minutes."

It did not take more than a few minutes. Julia was surprised how little time it actually took. If only other people had realized what little time it took.

It was not until Julia had stepped into the living room that Mark realized what Julia had done. He rose to meet her, proud of his wife.

Julia knelt down beside Bud and showed him what her hands held. Bud's eyes brightened. It was a tiny bundle of fur. A month old cocker-spaniel with sleepy eyes, and pink ears.

"Pinky the Second," Julia said with a smile. Bud reached out chubby fingers for a new Pinky, a new hope.

Julia was glad she had remembered Helen Reynolds telling her about the litter of pups. She was glad she had remembered one day many years ago when she herself was young with important things in her life.

Julia watched the sadness melt from Bud's eyes as he fondled the pup. She remembered herself as a little girl on the day her own dog had been hit by a car. They thought she would forget. They had not understood . . . for she never forgot.

Hard Times

SUPPOSE we drop that word "security?"

In the sense that it is used today there is no such thing, and we would all be happier not thinking about it and not worrying about it.

In the long-ago days when I was facing a rather formidable world, we never used the word "security." We didn't know that there was such a word. We certainly didn't suspect that there was such a thing.

There were six of us in family, the eldest was not quite 21. We had been raised in a comfortable, old-fashioned family fashion, we knew nothing of the city in which we suddenly had to make a living. We never, in nine years of good hard fighting and working for food and shelter, had five cents in the bank. There was nobody in sight to help us and we never were helped.

But as we knew nothing of security, we went along with great confidence and a great deal of happiness. Often the end of the week found us without a cent, but usually there were nourishing, if unpretentious, meals in the house, and there were beds made, and lots of books, and the long beaches of the Pacific to walk along and picnic on—and in a state of shocking insecurity we managed magnificently.

Lean Weeks

How we did it I haven't the faintest idea. I imagine that statistics of those days wouldn't be believed today. There were lean weeks but there were fat ones, too. Everything we had in the way of writing paper, candy, clothes, books, food, was common property, and when better days began the sharing went on, and does to this day.

The effect of these so-called hard times was curious. It taught me that utter and complete insecurity is not half as fearful a thing as it sounds, and, once experiencing it, one never can fear it again. There is always something one can do; there are always possible changes and makeshifts and plans and experiments, and all of them are immensely stimulating.

". . . the long beaches . . ."

So that real security, by one of life's most ridiculous paradoxes, is insecurity.

"What we feared was for the children," writes Agnes Fairfield, whose splendid letter from Johnstown set me thinking along this line. "Lew and I didn't care about ourselves. We'd both been nicely raised, in the American way. I mean a small-town 8-room house, trees, car, high school, and hopes for college. But Lew had only two years business school, and I went into kindergarten work, and held a job for four years. But we wanted better things for our children, fine clothes, associates, amusements, and when our plans went smash we felt keenly for them, and indeed they did for themselves. They were then Deary, 14, Junior, 12, and Marylou, 6. Bad ages to make children feel the pinch of poverty.

Live Simply

"It was then that I wrote to you," this letter goes on, "and you told me to begin to look down, instead of up. To live more and more simply, rather than to continually expand. To endure the children's consternation then, for the sake of the children's future.

"Well, we did. In fact, we had to. We moved to a rather lonely and shabby place, we started growing vegetables, selling eggs, we did everything. My stricken husband became convalescent, slowly, slowly, slowly, and can walk around his little farm now. We've not had one moment's money worry since we moved, and that's six years ago. We've no money left over, but we have the 'makings,' and we have three children of whom we can really be proud.

"They rose to this crisis in a way that makes my eyes fill when I think of it. Their father never heard one single word of complaint. And as we began to see that on the slimmest of margins we really could make it, the exhilaration of being so low that you couldn't go any lower began to inspire us all."

Every little extra quarter for services or eggs or tourist accommodation overnight helped the budget. Deary, happily married now, with a baby son, found a dozen occupations that interested her, and were lucrative, too, and never went in for the adolescent vapors that so many of her friends had to face. It was hard to take the plunge, especially with the children in mind, but it turned out to be the great adventure of our lives."

This family never knew the desire for complete security of today that is so overrated.

Brannan Suggests Naming Tater Bug 'Russian Beetle'

VIENNA, Austria — Charles F. Brannan, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, jokingly suggested that the name of the Colorado beetle (potato bug) should be changed to "Russian beetle."

The secretary was commenting at a news conference on charges made by the Communists last year that U.S. planes dropped potato bugs in Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

The U.S. official is making an inspection tour of agricultural projects in Europe.

Bull Calf Tries Ski-Jump; None the Worse for Wear

OSLO, Norway — The village of Frederikstad in southern Norway believes that it has a great vaudeville performer, if he could only be induced to repeat his performance. The town reported what it believed to be the first successful ski-jump ever made by a bull calf.

The calf was ambling along the top of the well-known Oeya ski-jump, when it sat down on its haunches and shot down the 40-foot long run.

Tail flying, the animal made a perfect three-point landing, shook itself and then walked away.

Marine Sergeant Discovers Pigeons Come Home to Roost

EL TORO, Calif.—Pigeons, it is said, always come home to roost. T/Sgt. John E. Tonsley found one sitting atop a loft at this marine air station. On its leg, the bird carried a band identifying it as a navy bird, born in 1943, service serial number 494.

There had not been any pigeons at the station since 1946, when the navy, which used them from blimps during the war, moved away.

Birds Place Live Ants In Feathers, Expert Says

WASHINGTON, D. C. — A variety of kinds of small birds, among them the hermit thrush, place live ants in their feathers, apparently to rid themselves of feather lice. This curious custom is described in a bulletin on North American thrushes by Arthur Cleveland Bent, issued by the Smithsonian Institution.

The birds, according to the bulletin, seize the ants and place them in their feathers, usually under the wings. They may also crush the ants with their bills and rub the juices on their feathers, or they may dust themselves in ant hills.

Various theories have been advanced to explain this behavior. It is generally believed that both the live ants and the formic-acid secretions from the crushed ones repel feather lice. Some believe that birds eat ants for the formic acid, which may act as a medicine to increase muscular energy and expel internal parasites.

Mr. Bent describes the hermit thrush as the most gifted songster of North American birds and gives an extensive analysis of its somewhat complicated song. Relatively few, he says, have heard the bird at its best because of its solitary woodland life.

Berlin Newspaper Reports Epidemic of Typhoid Fever

BERLIN, Germany — The west Berlin newspaper Telegraf reported recently that an epidemic of typhoid fever had made more than 1,000 persons ill in the Russian zone of Thuringia. Soviet controlled newspapers made no mention of the reports. The Telegraf said that the epidemic had spread over a wide area and that youth summer camps and theaters were closed and all public gatherings forbidden.

Russia Lurks in Background of Iran Oil Dispute

By Wright A. Patterson

IN AN EFFORT to settle the difficulty between the Iran government and the Iran-Anglo Oil Company, an English corporation, 54 per cent of the stock of which is owned by the English government, the government of Iran has asked President Truman to act in the capacity of mediator.

He accepted, but it means that the job will be performed by our British born and British sympathizing secretary of state, Dean Acheson. Small chance to get an unprejudiced effort to get a settlement on its merits.

And what is the heated argument all about?

A number of years ago, a group of English capitalists, including the English government, organized the Iran-Anglo Oil Company for the purpose of producing the tremendous amount of oil in the Iran field. After making an agreement with the Iran government, the English company invested more than a billion dollars for a plant that would take the oil from the ground, refine it and market it.

Under the terms of the agreement with Iran, the English company was to pay the government of Iran 20 cents a barrel on all of the oil secured.

That agreement was satisfactory until American oil companies entered the Arabian fields and arranged to extract the oil of those Arabian countries and pay to the governments of those near East nations one half of the profits derived from their operations. Iran demanded a new deal, with a division of the profits on the oil taken from Iran wells. The English company refused to make a new arrangement, but did advance to 26 cents a barrel paid to the Iran government.

The present controversy is over a renewed demand of Iran for a new agreement on a profit-division basis. When that was refused, Iran seized and nationalized the oil fields and the plants of the English company, but because of a lack of trained technicians, Iran cannot operate the enormous plant, and the English government will not permit its citizens to work for Iran, and is taking all of them out of the country.

The only other available source of supply of technicians is Russia. With Russians in charge of that mammouth oil plant, Russia would get the product.

For Russia that represents one of the vital essentials for waging war against the free nations. Without an assured supply of oil, she could not long operate either her planes or her transport.

For the Iranian oil to fall into Russian hands would be a serious blow for the nations of the Atlantic Pact, including especially the United States and England.

The Iran government has announced that all the force that is available will be used to prevent England from sending a force into Iran to protect English interests, which England would probably do if any effort is made to operate the mammouth plant.

The President and Secretary Acheson have a real problem to solve, a problem in which we all have an interest because of the danger of Iranian oil falling into the hands of Russia and being used against us, should that threatened war materialize.

But England can be assured of the very best our British-born secretary of state can render his native country.

The civilian employees of the department of defense, the army of bureaucrats commanded by General Marshall, outnumbers by better than two to one the fighting forces commanded by General Ridgway in Korea, and the compensation paid those in the bureaucratic army is far greater than that paid to our fighting forces. The difference is that those in the bureaucratic army and their relatives can be counted upon to vote for those who gave them a job.

FLOWERS AND WARNING . . . Richard Stokes, head of Britain's oil mission in Iran, is handed flowers and a warning by Persian priest, Seyed Abolghassom Kashani, during a friendly meeting in Teheran. The priest, reported to be the man behind the terrorists who shot Iranian Premier Razmara five months ago, warned Mr. Stokes "to tell the British government that if Premier Mossadegh deviates in the slightest from oil nationalization laws, the people will send him where Razmara was sent." Latest developments in the talks are that agreements are possible.

Cadets Victims of 'Win' Disease

By GRANTLAND RICE

Here is the Bible's finest plea—
A line that can never be turned or budged—
Write this down for them all to see—
"Judge not, that ye be not judged"!

The Glory (?) of Winning

Possibly one of the worst obsessions connected with competitive sport is what one might call "The glory of winning." There is very little actual glory in winning. The glory from a game not only lies in giving 100 per cent of all you have but in the contest itself. Yet football coaches, especially, have been almost completely overwhelmed by this hell-bent desire for victory.

Grantland Rice

There isn't a better football coach nor a more honorable man in the country than Earl Red Blaik. But Red Blaik, like so many, many other coaches, was caught in this swirl of victory importance. He was caught in a system, not of his own making, a system that covers the country.

Win—win—win, and win at any price, is an alumni slogan—win or get fired. This covers the football map—north and south, east and west. The coaches know the answer. So do the players who are recruited, proselyted, pampered and paid for—in many cases not even forced to attend classes.

Today it has gotten so that over a winning football team there is too often a heavier cloud or shadow of scandal than the losers know. "How much did they cost?" "How much do they get?"

After a debacle around 1941 or 1942, when Army teams were crushed, Army (I mean Army Brass) decided to get a winner. Army did. I was never impressed with Army's war teams, gathered, as Navy's were from civilian colleges, meeting 17-year-old kids or 4F's. Both Army and Navy went completely haywire those war years. I think they know it now.

But in the desire to have winning teams, Army, and possibly Navy, brought in stars who couldn't pass the scholastic test. So they cribbed. It wasn't nice. But I wouldn't have agreed to the Army honor code that included stool-pigeon work and snooping.

Army's system was 100 per cent wrong. Any system that involves from 90 to 200 cadets in any such snarl is entirely wrong.

I don't believe 10 per cent of the football players in all other American colleges would have been able to come through safely and clean, as things were set up.

The West Point System

We still say that any system that involves so many cadets in deadly serious trouble through so many years must be wrong.

When the first West Point news broke there were only 90 mentioned. As we understand it, there are possibly 200 involved, not counting the other hundreds who go back through some 10, 12 or many more years.

These kids who come to West Point are as clean and as decent as any kids the country has. They come to a so-called honor system that has been broken and violated through a decade, or longer.

They were entirely wrong. But they were not cheating for profit. They were out of line to stay with a tough job, that too often ends in death or mutilation.

West Point and Annapolis are no baby-sitter enterprises. They give you 17 hours a day of rough going-over, mental and physical. When you throw in football work—extremely important to the Academy and a wearing test—you add greater pressure. Few can take it in such doses. You can't also ask these men or boys to be stool pigeons and snoopers.

The only honor test worthwhile affects only the individual involved. There is still very much we must hear from the baffled and confused Pentagon group.

Many at West Point have failed in a number of respects. But don't forget that West Point's higher command has failed even more dismally and so has the ruling body at the Pentagon.

Many Robinson Angles

There are many angles in the Robinson-Turpin affair. Just how much fighting ability did Robinson's Paris invasion remove from his system? Robinson has been fighting many years. How far back has he gone? Just how good is Turpin? Was it Turpin's ability or Robinson's fading that brought about the result?

The majority feeling we have run across to date is that Robinson will be another fighter in September.

Few thought John L. Sullivan was slipping when he met Jim Corbett. It has been that way ever since. The champ can do no wrong—until he's licked.

Visiting around Iowa

by Joe Marsh

Iowa's 50-50 Town

Iowa has many interesting towns. But one of the most unique is Lineville — half in Iowa, half in Missouri.

There's a Mayor for the Missouri side, one for Iowa . . . a doctor licensed in Missouri, and one in Iowa. Kids from Missouri go to school on the Iowa side.

It's a fine town and the folks all work together, irrespective of which side of the line they live on.

But, imagine what would happen if Lineville were on some of these European borders! There'd be a barrier across Main Street . . . police on either side. You'd need a pass to cross over; and "border incidents" all the time.

Makes you realize what a blessing it is to live in a free country. In Missouri they like poke greens, in Iowa dandelion greens. Some folks enjoy a temperate glass of beer, some ice tea or coffee. But we don't set up dividing lines to rights, citizenship, or human freedoms.

Long live Lineville and the good neighbor policy it stands for!

Three Klemme Youths Injured In Cycle Collision

TWO MOTOR CYCLES COLLIDED NEAR THE MITCHELL BOCK FARM

Larry Stille Hospitalized Following Wreck Saturday Night

Three Klemme boys on two motorcycles were injured Saturday night at about 10:00 o'clock 2½ miles east of Klemme near the lane leading to the Mitchell Bock farmhome when their machines collided on the gravel road.

Hospitalized was Larry Stille, son of Quentin Stille, who suffered a brain concussion, bruises and a badly cut hip. Lee and Gayland Gruis, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Gruis, riding on the second machine, were cut and bruised. All of the boys were brought to Klemme by Mr. and Mrs. Herman Lauen who were returning to their home.

Lee and Gayland Gruis were returning home on their motorcycle and Larry Stille was accompanying them part way home. Near the Bock farm Stille's machine evidently skided into the path of the Gruis machine which struck Stille's motorcycle broadside in the middle, throwing all boys onto the road. The boys were in a dazed condition when picked up by Mr. and Mrs. Lauen.

Stille returned home from the hospital Tuesday but will be confined to his home for a week. The other boys have nearly recovered from the accident.

MRS. ALVIN GOLL PRES. OF MUSIC MOTHERS CLUB

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded businesses and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

Courtesy on the highway makes the difference between tragic accidents and safe, pleasant driving.

Your Iowa Safety Congress points out one of the most abused highway courtesies—and the most dangerous when ignored—dimming your headlights when approaching a car at night from the rear.

Every driver who has traveled the highways at night has experienced the panic of temporary blindness when bright lights from the car behind have glard into his rear-view mirror. Many cars have gone into the ditch or crashed blindly into oncoming traffic because of the thoughtlessness of the driver in the car in back of them.

When you drive at night, protect yourself and your fellow drivers—dim your headlights for the car ahead of you, as well as for oncoming traffic.

Don't let your bright lights dim someone's bright future!

BY RAY EASTMAN

It ended like an indecisive debate. Each man asked a question the other couldn't answer. The argument was never taken up again.

The two men involved had lived in the small town for years. They were not intimate friends, but they knew each other in the casual, friendly way of small towns. Probably they met many times on street corners, at coffee counters and talked on different sides of some issue of the day.

One afternoon these two men were approaching one another on a highway near the town. A small, steep hill stood between them.

One man drove up his side of the hill at a slow rate of speed but, for some reason, in the middle of the highway, straddling the center line.

The other man climbed his side of the hill on the right side of the highway, but at no-margen-for-error speed. They met just below the crest.

A few minutes later, both men were sprawled in the backseat of the car of a passing motorist who was taking them to a hospital. They were injured, bleeding, stunned. Neither knew if he were dying or not.

But one asked, "Fred, why did you come so fast.

And the other asked, "Why didn't you drive on your own side of the road?"

Neither man could understand the other's mistake or answer for his own. The brief debate died with one of the drivers.

HANCOCK JUNIOR FAIR BUILDING FUND DRIVE NOW UNDERWAY

The friends of 4-H and FFA held a "Kick-Off" meeting on Tuesday night September 11th to raise funds to build junior fair exhibition buildings. Sixty-three Hancock County people attended to discuss the drive The committee that has been working on the selection of site and setting up the drive explained the reasons for need of the new buildings.

They include the need for more premiums, better facilities for all of the livestock that goes back home after the show, members are afraid of taking some contagious disease back home. The leaders also believe that the show will be better if both boys and girls exhibits are on the same grounds.

The buildings will be rented out for storage, etc., for most of the year.

Remember that all eligible voters in Hancock County are members of the Fair Association. The name of the organization is "Hancock County Agriculture Society."

Each township has a goal of $1000.00 toward the building fund. The 29 4-H clubs in the county are planning to donate $25.00 for club. We have over $250 already turned in by local clubs and the county 4-H officers.

The committee whose chairman is Aaron Stromer, believes that each township should easily exceed their coal if each farm family will give their support.

Our junior's are our most impontant crop. Let's give them a boost by making this project a reality.

The check up is scheduled for the 1st week in October. Get your donation in before this date.

SUGGEST WAYS TO HELP KEEP BASEMENT DRY

Damp basements have been causing Iowa farmers trouble in nearly all seotion of the state this summer. And unless something is done about it when new houses are built and when older houses are repaired, the condition will continue to be serious.

Extension agricultural engineers at Iowa State College say in building new homes there's one way of keeping basements dry. This is by laying a 4-inch tile along the outside of the basement wall. This should be placed at the level of the footing, and covered with a foot of gravel to permit rapid drainage following heavy rains and roof runoff.

The tile drains have their outlet in an open field or a field tile rather than in a septic tank, because field drainage is much more rapid. The second step in keeping out the water is application of a ½-inch layer of plaster on the outside of the basement wall, covering the plaster with several coats of asphalt paint.

Even with this protection, there's still a chance for some seepage. This dampness will depend upon the type of workmanship involved in plastering and building the walls. Defects such as cracking of plaster, improperly mixed mortar in the basement wall, and peeling or cracking of paint may all lead to seepage.

For the older houses that are already built, these precautions will be of little value economically. The engineers recommend grading the land downward from the house to make sure the surface water runs away from the house rather than toward it. They also recommend using eaves troughs on all houses, with the drop pipe emptying about 5 to 10 feet away from the foundation so water won't drain along the basement walls.

Lesson for September 23, 1951

DO YOU belong to the human race? It isn't as large as you might think.

Hendrik Willem Van Loon once figured out that you could make one box, half a mile long, half a mile wide and half a mile deep, and you could put into that box every man, woman and child in the entire world, packed in like sardines of course, and then you could nail that box up and tip it over into the Grand Canyon.

Dr. Foreman

With the human race no bigger than that, isn't it stupid of us not to get together? If you ever read Mark Twain's fascinating tale, "Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven," you will remember how that mariner got lost on his way to heaven and arrived at the wrong gate. Since no one at that gate had ever heard of "the earth," the captain finally identified himself as from the Solar System.

Still no one had heard of it. Finally some one discovered it, a tiny dot on an enormous map. The Captain was considerably taken down when he learned how small the earth is in the immense starry universe; and so might we all be.

Passengers on the Same Planet

IN THE EYES of God and his angels, this earth and the people on it do not fill up the big place they fill in the eyes of us mortals. This does not mean that we are unimportant to ourselves, or of no concern to God.

Saint Paul gave us the Christian reason—always the best of reasons — why human beings ought to realize how close together we really are. Speaking to the university crowd at Athens, he quoted from a Greek poet to prove his point: "We belong to His race." (Acts 17:28, Moffatt's translation.)

God made all peoples "from a common origin." In him we live and move and have our being. Remember that Paul was not speaking in a Christian church. Of course Christians are brothers in an even warmer and more living sense; but Paul could say, even to men who were not Christians as he was, that he and they were alike offspring of God, that they all had their being in the same Creator and Father.

The Importance of Being Human

IF WE would only just stop pinning our little tags on people! We call them "foreigners" or "farmers" or "Canadians" or "college boys" or "Chinese." So they are; but the most important fact about Chinese, or fishermen, or farmers or any other class of mankind, is that they are human beings.

What we have in common, as human beings, is infinitely more important than the variations which set us off into different races, classes and groups. The Christian will be a loyal citizen of his own land; but he will also remember that he is a world-citizen too. And as a world-citizen, he will always remember certain truths about all his fellow human beings.

One is that since we all have a common humanity, we all stand in need of God. It is not much exaggeration, if any, to say that to be human is to be helpless.

Scholars write books with titles like "The Human Predicament," which is a short way of saying that if you are human you are in a mess. You need God, whoever you are. But if you know that, then also remember that all other members of the human race need him too, quite as much as you do.

Our Lost Brothers

REMEMBER, too, that while all are summoned to the same destiny (as Paul said: "God commands all men to repent"—not just some of them!), many and many a man (must we say, alas, most men?) misses that destiny.

There is a broad road leading to destruction, Jesus said, and many are traveling that road. How can a Christian be indifferent about a thing like that? Every man on the dark road is a man who might be a Christian.

From the dead-end road of selfishness, hatred and pride he might come over to the highway of God . . . if some one took the trouble to go after him. But we shall not bother ourselves much, we shall not bother ourselves enough, about our lost brothers, unless we have the world-citizen's eye and the world-Christian's heart.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or wrong diet may cause getting up nights or frequent passages.

Don't neglect your kidneys if these conditions bother you. Try Doan's Pills—a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While often otherwise caused, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief from these discomforts—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

Pork Loin Roast Gives Good, Economical Meal
(See Recipes Below)

LOOKING FOR WAYS to have meat on the menu and still live within an economical food budget?

Proper preparation of even the thriftiest cuts makes them simply delicious. Along with eating handsomely of these nutritious cuts, you may also want to take a few bows for keeping the budget straightlaced.

Some of the really economical cuts of meat are scarcely heard about, any more. Many of the butchers don't stock them because the demand is low, but usually they're happy to get them simply for the asking.

Salt pork, for example, was an old-time favorite and grandmother knew how to prepare it deliciously. Pork hocks are another tempting dish and so are lamb shanks.

Try some savory liver dishes, using beef or pork liver because they're more economical. Stretch inexpensive roast pork with clever dressing sticks and vegetables. All these will make a difference in how much more you get out of the meat dollar!

Busy Days Require Easily Prepared Meals

Use leftover slivered meat with potatoes in gravy; heat these to go over toast. Add buttered beets, orange salad and prune whip for a snappy dessert.

When you're going to be away from home most of the day, prepare food in advance or select quick-cooking foods that require little time. Here are suggestions that help you get meals in no time:

While you broil fish, cook lima beans or reheat canned ones. Parboiled potatoes fry in the skillet in drippings while you toss some greens for salad. Open a can of fruit or serve fresh fruits with cookies from the jar.

Put canned baked beans in a casserole and top with frankfurters and bake to heat through. Tomato aspic prepared in advance can contain bread and butter pickles. Baked apples can be cooked the night before.

of Main Street and the World

Threat of Inflation Increases As Price Index Hits a New High

INFLATION THREAT—With the government's report that the consumers' price index rose to a record level last month, the dangers of inflation took first place in the week's news.

The bureau of labor statistics reported the index figure went from 185.2 to 185.5. This means the retail prices of goods and services bought by moderate-income families averaged 85.5 per cent higher than the average between 1935 and 1939. This is 9 per cent above the level before the Korean war.

It also means that more than 3,000,000 workers who have cost-of-living escalator clauses in their contracts will receive automatic raises of approximately 1 cent per hour.

Industry member of the wage stabilization board, who recently approved escalator clauses in union contracts, warned when the new index figures were announced that the arrangement is not based on sound economic principles. "Putting all workers, manufacturers, farmers and merchants on escalation may easily prove the first step to national bankruptcy," the group warned.

A Beautiful Shoot

Gen. James A. Van Fleet reports UN forces will be able to withstand any new Communist attack. He said a new Red offensive would "play into our firepower. If we can get them out into the open, we would have a beautiful shoot."

The average home towner seems to have the feeling that runaway inflation is dangerously near If each group in the nation's economy continues trying to get ahead of every other, then the economic situation may explode into a mad race that can lead to ruin.

Food and rent prices are credited with pushing the index figures to the new high Food prices averaged 12.1 per cent higher than in June, 1950, just before the Korean war. There are indications of further increases. Large dealers are reported demanding boosts of 1 to 6 cents an item for well known brands of flour, breakfast cereals, canned fruit and vegetables, vinegar, mayonnaise and spaghetti.

PRICE CONTROLS—While the average home towner views the price picture with increasing fear, President Truman asked congress for three major changes in the new price controls law.

The President asked repeal of: (1) The provision requiring that price ceilings reflect rises in business costs that have occurred since Korea. ("An economic booby trap," Truman called it.); (2) The amendment giving wholesalers and retailers their customary percentage markups; (3) The amendment banning the OPS livestock-slaughter quotas, under which each slaughterer was told how many animals he could handle

No one can predict how congress will react to the President's requests, but the average small town American, whatever his political views and his beliefs concerning the cause of higher prices, wants something done about it. He realizes the nation is in as much danger today from its internal economic picture as from external enemies; he feels it is time for personal interests and politics to take a back seat to the nation's welfare.

WESTERN POLITICS—Democratic party representatives from 15 midwest states, as far east as Ohio and as far west as Wyoming, the great farm belt that came to President Truman's rescue in 1948, met at French Lick, Ind., to discuss possibilities for 1952. Their conclusions were startling to the average home towner.

Briefly, they concluded that President Truman will be a candidate for reelection and that he can defeat Sen. Robert Taft. Should Gen. Eisenhower seek the office he could have had in 1948, then Mr. Truman's chances would not be so good.

As a basis for these startling conclusions, the democratic leaders believe the President would get a large farm vote as he did in 1948 because farm prices have been high during his administration. A continued high level of domestic prosperity without inflation would also add to his chances, they concluded.

They also pointed out that Truman was denied New York's 47 electoral votes by the candidacy of Henry A. Wallace and those of four southern states by the Dixiecrats. This is unlikely in the 1952 campaign.

The big question, of course, is Gen. Eisenhower. The general is a midwesterner, and it would not be difficult to sell a national hero to the people in the home towns.

THE NEW FEAR—The latest news from Korea would indicate the Chinese Communists are beset with a new fear, that of world condemnation for breaking off the Kaesong peace talks. It is the only reasonable conclusion since the Reds announced the talks can continue if the Allies will admit a plane tried to murder the Communist delegates by dropping explosive bombs and jellied gasoline near their quarters.

Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, who previously rejected their charge as a fake and a fraud, is unlikely to accede to their demand. Ridgway has informed the Reds that their neutrality-violation charges are nothing more than malicious lies, deliberately manufactured for propaganda effect and unworthy of reply.

As long as both parties maintain this attitude there is little hope for a resumption of talks. And even if they should be resumed, other incidents will be manufactured by the Reds to further their propaganda aims. Peace in Korea will not be restored until one side or the other is thoroughly and completely defeated.

JAPANESE TREATY—On Tuesday 34 nations gathered at San Francisco to sign the proposed peace treaty with Japan. Russia is represented, but no one expects her to sign the document which is sponsored by the United States. To the contrary, she will do everything in her power to wreck the treaty negotiations and eventually will present her own versions of a pact.

The big news as the conference opened was India's boycott of the meeting. That country's denunciation of the treaty was in direct line with Moscow propaganda and will have many repercussions in this nation's foreign aid program. It may lead to a tougher U.S. policy toward India and a reduction in aid given her in recent months. It may also mean that a number of other countries will suffer as a direct result of India's stand.

From now until the conference closes, the people in the home towns of the country can expect a flood of Soviet propaganda against the treaty. In fact, one of the greatest propaganda slanders the world has ever seen is about to begin.

Eva Peron, wife of President Juan Peron of Argentina, often called the most powerful woman in the world, has been nominated to be her husband's running mate as Vice-President in the November 11 elections. The election is only a formality under Argentina's dictatorship. She would be the first woman in history to hold such a high office in the Americas.

THIS IS CHINA

Peiping Demands Life Data on Everyone

The Communists in China have demanded a combination confession and autobiography for millions of persons in the country whom the Reds find necessary to re-educate in the new attitudes of Chinese communism. It is a complete record and repudiation of the past life of the individuals concerned.

The document serves as a domestic passport that must be produced whenever the possessor seeks a new job, wants to move from one part of the country to another, or from some other reason, comes under official scrutiny.

The person under examination may have made money on the stock market or gone to a U.S. university. Whatever it is, these must be confessed and branded as bad and wrong.

Predicts Intensity Polio Cases for 1951

ANN ARBOR — Approximately 27,000 cases of polio will occur in the United States during 1951, a University of Michigan school of public health statistician has predicted.

"There are a number of reasons for supposing that 1951 will be a far less severe year for polio than the record year of 1949 during which about 43,000 cases were reported," Dr. Fay M. Hemphill indicated.

Dr. Hemphill's "guesstimate" is based on figures supplied to him through the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Inc., by the United States public health service which receives weekly reports from the various state health departments throughout the nation.

Since June, 1950, he has been making a continuous statistical study of the areas and number of polio cases occurring in the United States. His studies are sponsored by grants from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Inc.

What You Should Know About The Hot Lunch

THEY EAT AT SCHOOL

Close to 900 Iowa schools have joined the national school lunch program and serve the children a hot meal at noontime. You should know all about this lunch so you can plan the rest of your youngster's meals around it and make sure he's eating enough of all the right food each day.

Breakfast and the evening meal you prepare at home should team up with that hot school lunch and help spell out health and happiness for your children. That's what most mothers strive for day after day—three meals that add up to bright cheeks, sparkling eyes and lots of zip.

Here in Iowa more and more schools have joined the national school lunch program and are serving a hot "Type A" lunch to the children each noon. And more mothers are getting acquainted with the program and putting that information to work on planning the family meals.

"Type A" Lunch

What is a Type A lunch? Just what foods can you count on its providing your child each day?

Jewel Graham, nutritionist at Iowa State college, tells us that a Type A lunch is, first of all, a complete meal built around the daily food needs of a 10 to 12-year-old. It's planned to take care of about one-third of those essential foods a youngster should have each day for good health and vitality.

This hot lunch will include ½ pint of whole milk, 2 teaspoons of butter or fortified margarine, and three-quarters cup of vegetables or fruit or both. You can also count on its providing 2 ounces of lean meat, poultry, fish or cheese—or else one egg, or half a cup of dry beans, peas or soybeans, or 4 tablespoons of peanut butter. Then, too, your youngster will have one or more servings of bread, muffins or other hot bread made of whole grain or enriched flour or cereal.

(Incidentally, if you pack a lunch box for your youngster each day, you'll want it to include those same foods.)

Now, says Miss Graham, let's check this against the amount and kinds of food your children should have each day.

Milk In His Meals

Starting with milk, a growing youngster needs at least 3 or 4 cups a day. Since the Type A lunch supplies half a pint, or 1 cup, that means he should have 2 or 3 cups more at breakfast and supper— either as a beverage or in cooked foods.

When it comes to meat, poultry and fish, the school lunch will provide about one-third of the day's needs. That will mean planning for two more servings in this food group. As for vegetables, fit one serving of both a green and yellow vegetable into the evening meal.

Plan to serve a high vitamin C food at home every day, too, such as oranges, tomatoes, grapefruit, raw cabbage or salad greens. You can't always count on the school lunch to supply one of these foods. Your child needs a high vitamin C food every single day.

A youngster should also eat one or more servings of potatoes and three or more servings of cereal foods each day The school lunch is usually high in cereal foods, as they're high in nutritive value and an economical source of energy. As for butter or fortified margarine, the school lunch takes care of about one-third of his needs on this score.

Now, you may ask, what about active teenagers? Won't they need more of these different foods, since that Type A lunch is tailored to a 12-year-old?

Yes, answers Miss Graham. Teenagers will need more protein and energy foods and more vitamins and minerals, too. Many school lunchrooms provide larger servings for the older children, just as you do at nome.

(winner of the 1951 Iowa ACS bronze medal for his outstanding contributions to cancer control.)

What Is Cancer?

Cancer is a condition in which some of the cells or tissue begin to grow in a wild and uncontrolled fashion, and no longer respond to the laws that control the growth and activity of normal cells. Such wild cells usually lose the ability to function as intergal parts of the organism, and actually become parasites. Cancer never ceases to grow while the host lives.

What Causes Cancer?

There is no one cause of cancer, but apparently at least 3 type of influences may be responsible, singly or in combination, for cells acquiring malifnant properties.

a. Chronic or prolonged irritation, which may be chemical (hormones, coal tar products, etc), thermal (heat), or mechanical (jagged teeth, ill fitting dentures, etc.)

b. Increasing age, as evidenced by the rising incidence in cancer in the later years of life.

c. Heredity. Cancer is not inherited, but is significantly more common in those whose ancestors have succumbed to the disease, just as is the case with high blood pressure and certain other chronic diseases.

Is cancer contagious or infectious?

Cancer is neither contagious nor infectious and, consequently there is no danger that one may catch it from another person. Physicians and nurses, who treat hundreds of cancer patients, are no more likely to have the disease than any other population group.

For answers to cancer questions write American Cancer Society, Mason City.

Scientific Instrument Charts Human Blood Flow

The newest scientific instrument is a machine which photographs the flow of blood through the human circulatory system.

Called a "seriagraph", it is actually an X-ray machine, which takes pictures as rapidly as every half-second although it can be set for lower speeds.

The seriagraph is most valuable to the brain surgeon. It can be used for other parts of the blood system, but is especially valuable for locating brain tumors, cerebral hemorraghes, atrophies, and other kinds of pathological deteriorations.

Principal parts of the apparatus are the rotating anode tube, which projects the x-ray, and a Fairfield aerial camera, which records the pictures on a roll of film.

A patient brought in for observation of a suspected brain tumor is placed on a table, under anesthetic, with his head immobilized between the tube and the camera. A radio-opaque substance, either a thorium or an iodine dye, is injected into the artery in the neck with a syringe.

During the six seconds it takes for the dye to travel through the arteries, capillaries and veins of the brain, and out again, the camera makes its pictures. If there is a tumor, the pictures will show where the flow of dye was blocked.

Army Needs All-Purpose Rubber For Operations

American chemists, who engineered the synthetic rubber miracle during World War II, must now provide the army with rubber equipment which will withstand all weather conditions from tropical sunlight to Artic cold.

Because it is not possible to earmark rubber items for use under a given set of climatic conditions, all equipment must be designed for successful operation from 65 degrees below zero to 130 degrees above.

Items intended for tropical use might encounter temperatures below freezing during airborne transit, indicating that the Army needs rubber items which, when out of use, can be stored at temperatures from minus 80 to plus 160 degrees. Even greater extremes than this have been experienced.

Four low-styrene modifications of the standard GR-S synthetic rubber—two of them made by the "cold rubber" process—or blends of them—fulfill the requirements of non-oil-resistant rubber for military purposes. The use of these types of rubber would also tend to relieve the nation's critical shortage of styrene.

Students Getting Better

The average age of the freshman dental student is dropping and his grades for predental studies are getting higher, it was reported by the Council on Dental Education of the American Dental association. More than 81 per cent of the 3,079 freshmen in the Last year's class had a grade of B minus or better in predental studies as compared with 44.5 per cent in the post-war class of 1946, the report showed. According to the study, reported in the Journal of the American Dental Association, last year's new class was also noted for its youth. More than 62 per cent of last year's group were under 24 years of age as compared with only 13 per cent of the 1947 class.

The Question of Iron

The American Iron and Steel Institute reports that the United States has access to an estimated iron ore reserve of 8,096,000,000 gross tons, including deposits as far away as Brazil, Venezuela and Labrador. Estimated ore reserves available to Russia amount to 6,060,000,000 gross tons and include only those deposits behind the iron curtain. The institute notes—in the interest of complete clarity—that the iron curtain, itself, is not included among Russia's iron ore reserves.

Remarkable Record

Dade County, Florida, of which Miami is the government seat, has a population of 489,830 and sold 220,064 automobile tags in 1950. In 1949, Dade County tailed Nassau County, New York and Genesee County, Mich. In Nassau there was a car for each .8 family or 2.8 persons; in Genesee for each .9 family or 3.1 persons. Dade County had a car for each 1.0 family or 3.3 persons in 1949.

Aid to Beauty

Even milady's lipstick case presented a challenge to industrial finish engineers. Their task was to find a finish that would not be damaged every time the user took the top off. They solved the problem by developing special finishes that withstand constant friction and the natural moisture of a hand. The resulting finishes also keep their new look longer.

The Busy Phone

For every minute in the year 1949 the Bell telephone companies — added 3.9 telephones; handled 83,000 telephone conversations; paid $3,843 in wages and salaries; received $1,116 from old or new investors; spent $2,055 for new construction; and paid out $659 in taxes.

Kiddie Fibs Product Of Fertile Imagination

The lies children tell are not always lies.

According to Childcraft Advisory Service, they are often signs of a lively imagination which parents would do well to encourage.

"Without imagination, there is neither sympathy nor creative talent," authorative writers for the Service point out.

Imagination can be developed to build bridges and cathedrals. It was people with imagination who invented television, bicycles, can openers and the other countless wonders and conveniences of modern civilization.

Yet imagination in the very small child is often discouraged by well-meaning parents who mistake his perfectly normal "flights of fancy" for lies.

Imaginative tales of childhood can also reflect desires which are unfulfilled. For example, when a child has no other children with whom to play, he often creates imaginary playmates whom he talks to and about.

Ingenious Solution

The filing of papers and reference material usually presents a puzzling problem to the householder. One man who does a great deal of his professional work at home which involves the filing of letters, papers and drawings, recently solved the problem by buying two second hand golden oak commercial filing cases and removing the metal hardware. Instead, strong but attractive wooden knobs were used as drawer pulls. Then, placing the files parallel with the wall—on either side of the double door leading from his study to the living room—he had a carpenter build bookcases on the sides. Enameled to match the woodwork, the filing cabinets now disappear almost completely into the background of the room.

Gasoline Being Tested

The Agriculture department in North Carolina is conducting tests of gasoline to provide better protection of the public against adulterated or illegally blended gasoline which has a flash point so low that its use might be hazardous. The tests are conducted in twelve laboratories on wheels. Retail outlets, terminals and sources of distribution are being checked.

Malaria Wonder Drug

Aralen is known chemically as 7-chloro-4 (4-diethylamino-1-methylbutylamino) quinoline diphosphate. Clinical investigation has shown it to relieve acute attacks of malaria much faster than previously known drugs, and to cure falciparum malaria, a type of disease that is nonrelapsing but often fatal.

AROUND IOWA

Found Wedding Ring

While working around the farm-yard, near Coggon, some 24 years ago Mrs Harry Coleman, now of Manchester, lost her wedding ring. Recently the ring was found by her sister-in-law as she inspected some tomato plants.

Large Tomato

Mrs. Fred Brelsford, Bouton, picked a three pound, six ounce tomato from her garden. It is seven inches in width and 19 inches in circumference.

LuVerne, Iowa Now

It's "LuVerne, Iowa," now. The post office department has changed it from "Luverne" to avoid confusion, at the request of residents of the town.

$1,000 Fire

A lightning bolt caused a $1,000 fire at the residence of Mrs. Nettie Mulford in Eldora recently. The lighting struck a large tree at the west side of the house, entered the building and set the kitchen ablaze. No one was home.

Yellowjackets

Yellowjackets built a nest right over the front door of the C. H. Graening home at Waverly recently. Ordinarily, these wasps live in the ground.

Missed Farm Home

A small "twister" missed the farm home of Carl Kestle near LeMars recently, but destroyed a small wash-house nearby, as well as a hog house and brooder shed.

100th Anniversary

Sandyville, in Warren county, will receive its 1000th anniversary this year. The town, population 93, was founded by members of the Sandy family in 1851. A family reunion is planned for next year.

Fish in the Iowa river saw an unusual sight at Iowa Falls recently; an apartment house crossing a bridge. The unusual moving job required purchase of two new timbers by the moving company; each 12x16 inches, 54 feet in length. Each timber cost $300

COW NEEDS BULKY FEED BEFORE, AFTER CALVING

Dairy cow rations before and after calving time should be bulky and laxative, according to Floyd Arnold, extension dairyman at Iowa State College.

Three to four weeks after calving the cow may be put back on full grain. If the cows are heavy milkers more time is usually required. Begin with 4 to 6 pounds of grain daily and increase the ration at the rate of an extra pound every 3 or 4 days. This should be done until the cow is getting the desired amount in proportion to her production.

During the last 2 weeks after freshening, Arnold says the grain mixture should include more oats and bran than normal. The mixture fed before freshening can be continued for the first few weeks after calving, gradually changing to the regular herd mixture.

TWO WAYS TO DRY CORN ARTIFICIALLY

Heated Air Is Faster, Unheated Air Is Safer

With the possibilities of having soft corn this year, Iowa farmers may wish to consider artificial drying. This may be done with present cribs on your farm if you take certain precautions, says S. S. DeForest, extension agricultural engineer at Iowa State College.

Air must enter and leave the cribs in such a way that it travels the same distance through the corn in all parts of the crib. This can be accomplished by covering the lower part of one side of the crib with a large canvas. Leave enough slack in it to allow it to balloon outward, forming a duct through which air may be blown. The size of this duct should be at least 1 square foot cross-section for each 1,000 cubic feet per minute of air delivered by the blower.

Prevent Air Escape

The crib wall above the duct and the ends of the crib should be sealed with canvas or reinforced kraft paper so air can't escape through these walls. The air then passes from the duct through the corn and out the other side or the top surface of the corn. New cribs being designed by the Midwest Plan Service have solid ends for drying purposes.

The corn may be dried by two methods—heated or unheated air Unheated air naturally take longer to dry the corn, but there's less danger of fire and there's no expense for fuel. Drying with unheated air is more dependent upon the weather, and may require frequent fan operation in the fall and early spring.

Drying corn with heated air means that more than one crib may be dried during the year with the same equipment, requiring less time per crib and drying the corn thoroughly in one continuous operation.

Heated Air Costs More

DeForest says the total cost of the heated air system will be slightly more than that of the unheated system. In recent tests run in the Midwest under reasonably good weather conditions in October, corn ventilated with a continuously operating fan without heat was dried from 30 percent moisture down to 20 percent in 2 weeks. Cost for the power was approximately 2 to 3 cents per bushel. In somewhat similar tests with heated air, the corn was dried from 24 percent down to 11 percent moisture in 48 hours at an average cost of 11 cents per bushel. This cost is higher than normal, as 11 percent moisture is lower than it needs to be, and cost figures included operator's labor depreciation, fuel consumed, and interest on investment.

Farmers interested in obtaining more information on corn drying may write to the Agricultural Engineering Department, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa.

GIVE TIPS ON SELECTING AND CARING FOR BOAR

Boar buying time is now at hand, and E. L. Quaife, extension swine specialist at Iowa State College, has a few points to offer in selecting and caring for boars.

Quaife says the boar should be secured two weeks, and preferably longer, before it's time to use him. This will allow time for him to become acquainted with his new surroundings, feeding and management. A small lot should be provided for him, where he can exercise. Too often the new boar is shut in a small, dark pen in the barn or hog house, where he may become stale from lack of exercise.

As a general rule it's a good plan to try the boar on a few market gilts to be sure that he's a worker. He should be chosen from an accredited herd free of Bang's or brucellosis and free of other diseases. Boars which go through a sales barn are often carriers of disease.

A boar should be in good thrifty condition at buying time, being neither too fat nor too run down. Some are used on several herds during the season, which may lead to overworking, and results in poor litters. Quaife says a young boar can safely breed 15 to 20 gilts, and if pen breeding is followed he may care for even more. Boars should not be loaned to neighbors unless you're certain their herds are disease-free.

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS

Two American Documents To Be Enshrined on Constitution Day

America's most precious historical documents—the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence—will be enshrined permanently in hermetically sealed glass enclosures at a ceremony Monday, (Sept. 17) Constitution Day.

The ceremony, in which President Truman and Chief Justice Vinson are scheduled to participate, is expected to be one of the most impressive ever held in the history of

In a test sealing, Dr. Roy W. Wampler, assistant director of research for Libbey - Owens-Ford Glass company; Alvin W. Kremer, of the library of congress, and Dr. G. M. Kline, of the national bureau of standards, show how the original documents of the constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence will be preserved permanently in helijm-filled glass cases.

the parchments, particularly since this will be the last time the documents will be touched by human hands Scientists say the enclosures will preserve the papers "for as long as man can foresee."

After the ceremony the sealed leaves will be replaced in their Shrine in the Library, where they have been viewed by an estimated 20,000,000 persons in the last 27 years. The display of the single page of the Declaration and the five leaves of the Constitution is expected to attract even greater throngs of sightseers after the ceremony.

Plans for preserving the original engrossed and signed manuscripts are the result of studies and experiments made during the last 10 years by the national bureau of standards at the request of Luther H. Evans, librarian of congress. During the last two years the library and the NBS have been assisted by thermopane technicians of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, who perfected the special metal-to-glass seal used to keep the glass cases air-tight.

"Every resource of science and technology has been applied in the effort to make these precious documents as permanently secure as the principles they proclaim," said Dr. Evans.

DR. EDWARD U. CONDON, director of the national bureau of standards, explained that exhaustive tests were conducted before the NBS scientists and the library decided this was the best method of protecting the documents and at the same time making it possible to continue to exhibit them publicly.

The glass enclosures, basically the same as the thermopane insulating glass used in thousands of American homes, will be filled with helium, an inert gas, as a further measure of protection for the documents. Even the relative humidity inside the cases is controlled to prevent the parchments from expanding or shrinking.

The early history of these documents was dramatic and—especially in the case of the Declaration of Independence which is 175 years old this year—involved much rough handling during the Revolution and the War of 1812. During the last generation, however, the library has protected them carefully and this latest improvement in the method of display is expected to preserve them intact for future generations of Americans.

DOROTHY Sarnoff, currently giving a delightful performance in the Broadway musical, "The King and I," still finds time for many guest performances on radio, to which she owes her first big break. over the country. This autumn may find her on the air regularly on a new program. In her very limited spare time she creates hats, paints a landscape occasionally, and recently has begun designing travelling bags—her latest, made of plastic, will soon be on the market.

Bill Holden is looking for a new hobby, one fitting for a man with three children and not much time. He's given up building model airplanes with motors—almost lost a finger at it, just before starting "Force of Arms," at Warners'.

Hollywood loves Murray Sices, leading designer of suits for small women—so many of the stars are about the size of Wanda Hendrix, who's five feet two. With little time to shop, they used to find it almost impossible to find clothes that would make them look the way their fans expect them to.

In the beginning, 12 years ago, "Mr. District Attorney" was patterned after the legal career of an ace prosecutor, Thomas E. Dewey. It switches from NBC to ABC on September 21, and October 1 will also be seen on television.

Star Bill Johnstone of the CBS Radio Network's "The Line-up" and his son Ronald, a Los Angeles drama student, are building an elaborate model theatre, 41 inches by three feet by three feet. It will be operated entirely by electrical power, and they are doing all the work themselves—but they're letting Mrs. Johnstone make the costumes, sets, etc.

THE FICTION CORNER

LUCKY LESLIE

By Helen Langworthy

THEY CALL ME Lucky Leslie—not because I'm so lucky but because of my wife Celia and her phobia. Sure, lots of people believe in luck, omens and that stuff. But you could cover half the country before you'd find anyone the equal of my Celia for ideas on luck. It's not ordinary garden variety luck that Celia talks about either — not four leaf clovers, new moons and rabbit's feet. Oh, no! Celia goes in strong for lucky numbers. In her book, 7 is the luckiest, 3 is a fair number and 6 you skid by with eyes shut and hands clenched.

3-Minute Fiction

Celia believes if you have good fortune doing a thing a certain queer way once, then if you repeat it—bingo!—you're fortunate. If Celia were to find a diamond on the corner of Main street on the 7th of the month and while wearing a red rain coat; she would believe that next month, come the 7th, she could don the same rain coat (no matter if the sun was blazing), go back and find a ruby. The queer part of it is —Celia would.

When we were married in those unpleasant days of '43, I had leave from the 15th of one month to the next. We had known each other for a couple years, Celia and I. If I'd had my way we'd have been married the 16th. But Celia said, "The 7th—that's the day for luck." Even reminding her that that date was a century away and that we would be married but a few days before I went back into action wouldn't swerve her The 7th it was; To this day Celia believes the reason I wasn't amongst the 166 killed in our regiment was because we were married on the 7th. And maybe she's right!

But Celia said, "The 7th—that's the day for luck."

Take our son—the doctor said David would be born on June 26th. Celia said she chose July 3rd. The doctor snorted, "Choose!" But David was born on the 3rd of July at 7 o'clock—just like Celia had predicted.

Her strongest belief is that things happen in 3's. If there's 2 big train wrecks, Celia expects the third. When David had measles and chicken pox inside of 2 months, I thought it enough. Celia said there would be more. He came down with the mumps on the 6th. If we have unexpected company 2 nights in a row, Celia makes a batch of cookies and waits for someone to drop in without warning. They always do!

BUT even Celia couldn't find enough lucky omens or charms to counteract the 6th of the month that was rushing at us. Old Crawford, head of Crawford Corporation said business was so bad that half the office crew would be through on the 6th. I was one of the last taken on.

The 6th was coming and I had a good idea of who was going to get a pink dismissal slip in their pay envelope. Celia said she would try to think of something. Ha! We both knew we were whistling in the dark.

Early the morning of that fateful day David woke with a terrific stomach ache. Two hours later he went to the hospital for an appendicitis operation. I know, operations aren't unusual. But it was blow number one—of three. At breakfast our toaster popped sparks and smoke instead of toast. Celia chattered about the low cost of repairs. But I knew she was thinking to herself 'the second trouble.'

Like they had gone into deep mourning, that's the way the office force looked. I tried to write up orders like it was just any day, instead of the 6th. Celia telephoned to say she had dropped her wrist watch and broken it. Now why was a trivial think like that worth a telephone call! Women!

Then the pay checks came. Mine didn't have a pink slip. I could have danced on my desk top. I rushed home to tell Celia the good news and that her theory was wrong. She took it casually. "Remember my watch," she asked blandly. "That was the third blow. See?"

But do you know something funny? She said she dropped it. I found her shoe on the dresser amidst some bits of broken glass, and some glass was stuck in the heel. You don't suppose the heel of her shoes met that watch on purpose—or, do you?

Crime in America

By ESTES KEFAUVER
United States Senator

One of a Series

Birth of the Crime Committee

Ordinarily, Americans don't think much about the existence and influence of organized crime. They know vaguely that it is there, and they let it go at that. For some years, however—since the days when I was a young lawyer in Tennessee—I had been troubled by the unpleasant realization that there was a tie-up between crime and politics.

The idea stayed with me when I became a member of the senate in January, 1949. More and more I was concerned with the phenomenon of politico-criminal corruption.

Early in 1950, an accumulation of events high-lighted the desperate need for learning the real facts about crime in America. The American Municipal association, alarmed by the effects of interstate crime operations on local governments, called for federal consideration of the problem. Newspapers—and the free press is one of our democracy's most potent weapons — were making startling disclosures about the power of modern crimesters, the white-collar successors to the Al Capones of an earlier era

I felt the time had come to demonstrate that there is nothing the American people cannot overcome if they know the facts So I took the issue to the senate floor by introducing a bill calling for a full-scale senate investigation of crime in interstate commerce.

As chairman, I was extremely fortunate in having the backing of four able colleagues These were Sen Robert R O'Conor, Democrat, of Maryland, to whom I turned over chairmanship of the committee last May when I felt the time had come for me to step down; Sen. Lester C. Hunt, Democrat, of Wyoming, whose great gift for common sense and arriving at sound decisions contributed much stability to our deliberations; Sen. Alexander Wiley, Republican, of Wisconsin, and that remarkable moral battler, Sen Charles W. Tobey, Republican, of New Hampshire.

Serving on the crime committee was a tremendous emotional experience for all of us. For me, it became more than merely a committee appointment: it became a way of life Almost everything conceivable happened, in San Francisco, someone stole my hat in the federal courthouse; in Los Angeles, a youngster grabbed me in the courthouse corridor as I walked past a telephone booth and asked me to say a word to "Mom."

Our first hearing was conducted in Miami, Fla , on May 26, 1950. Between that date and the time my term as chairman ended, I traveled approximately 52,330 miles from coast to coast. Hearings were conducted in Miami, Tampa, New Orleans, Kansas City, Cleveland, St. Louis, Detroit, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Las Vegas, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, and New York. They brought in evidence of widespread crime in other cities and states, and our investigators diligently pursued these leads. We questioned witnesses from nearly every state in the union.

Through it all, I listened with mounting indignation and revulsion to the shocking story of our national disgrace. When it was over, we had established that a nationwide crime syndicate does exist in the United States, despite the protestations of a strangely assorted company of criminals, self-serving politicians, plain blind fools and others who may be honestly misguided, that there is no such combine.

The Mafia and Lucky Luciano

The Mafia is the shadowy international organization that lurks behind much of America's organized crime. It is a network about which no member, on fear of death, will talk.

In fact, some of the witnesses whom we had good reason to believe could tell the Senate Crime Committee about the Mafia, sought to shrug it off as a sort of fairy tale or legend that children hear in Sicily where the Mafia originated. The Mafia, however, is no fairy tale. It is ominously real, and it has scarred the face of America with murder, traffic in narcotics, smuggling, extortion, white slavery, kidnaping and labor-racketeering

La Mafia even has its secret—and, of course, unwritten — code called "Omerta," a derivation of the Italian word for "man." The code is simple and brutal: death to those who resist or inform on the Mafia. Usually, a member of the offender's family is killed as additional warning

Narcotics Agent Claude A. Follmer testified that there is "some contention" as to the identity of the New York head of the Mafia. He revealed that "it has always been my understanding that it is either Vincent Mangano or Joseph Profaci."

Mangano is said by New York police to be active in Brooklyn waterfront rackets We had planned to question him, but our hearing time was consumed by other developments. His brother Philip Mangano, also active on the waterfront and publicly identified as prominent in the Mafia, was questioned by the committee in executive closed session A month after our New York hearings, Philip Mangano was found dead in a Brooklyn swamp, shot three times in the head.

Agent Follmer told how the Narcotic Bureau in the early 1940s broke up a vicious Mafia-backed Kansas City narcotics ring. "All of these persons," he related, "were members of the Mafia, or Black Hand, and were financed in the narcotics traffic as a group by the Mafia. This Mafia subsidiary placed the illicit drug traffic on a business-like basis and hired a legal advisor supervisor, general manager, traveling representative, a bookkeeper and an extensive retail sales force

"At St. Louis, a branch office operated under John Vitale, who was in turn under the domination of Thomas Buffa and Tony Lopiparo, chiefs of the St. Louis Mafia."

(In St. Louis, some months later, the committee summoned Gangster Lopiparo, alias "Lopip," to ask him about his presence with a group of Sicilian gangsters in Tia Juana, Mexico, about the time Binaggio and Gargotta were murdered in Kansas City Lopiparo at first was a sullen, snarling witness. He crouched in the witness chair and refused even to admit he had been in Tia Juana When I asked him on what legal ground he could justify his refusal, he snapped back: "Haven't I got a Constitution?")

"In 1942," Follmer went on, "it was determined that one of the sources of supply for the Kansas City group was a Mafia organization in Tampa, Fla., which in turn received smuggled drugs from Marseilles, France, via Havana, Cuba It was also indicated that Sebastino Nani, one-time Brooklyn Mafia hoodlum, now established in California, had furnished several large shipments of drugs to the Kansas City syndicate from New York."

When the committee said that Lucky Luciano, now in exile in Italy after his deportation from the United States, was operating as the international arbiter of crime, an associate of Luciano's in Italy protested that once again poor Mr Luciano was being maligned We do not think so. There was too much solid evidence.

During World War II, there was a lot of hocus-pocus about supposedly valuable services that Luciano, the convict, was supposed to have furnished the military authorities in connection with plans for the invasion of his native Sicily. We dug into this and obtained a number of conflicting stories. This is one of the points about which the committee would have questioned Governor Dewey, who commuted Luciano's sentence, if the governor had not declined our invitation to come to New York city to testify.

One story which we heard from Attorney Moses Palakoff was that naval intelligence had sought out Luciano's aid and had asked Polakoff to be the intermediary. Polakoff, who had represented Luciano, said, "The theory behind it was that the government had the Germans pretty well spotted, but they were afraid that if any sabotage might be done it would be done through Italians, who weren't well spotted." He was referring to sabotage along the New York water front. From a retired naval commander, who had a hand in the affair, we received inconclusive testimony as to the substance and value of the information obtained from Luciano.

There Is a Way To Repeal Income Tax Amendment

By Wright A. Patterson

THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION provides two methods of amending that document.

The one method with which we are familiar calls for the passage of a resolution by Congress calling for an amendment, followed by ratification of the proposed amendment by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states.

The other provides for passage by any state legislature of a demand for an amendment and then ratification of that demand by the legislatures of two-thirds of the states.

The second method bypasses Congress entirely. The Los Angeles Times referred to this method of amendment as a "club provided for the states for the protection of states' rights."

It is now being considered as a method of repealing the amendment that made possible the levying of federal income taxes. This would force the national government out of the field of tax revenue and leave it to the states to provide for state expenditures and would stop the "grants in aid" that now represents the largess of the national government out of federal taxes in exchange for which the states surrender much of their sovereignty.

It took a long time to secure the enactment of the 16th amendment, the income tax amendment, by the needed three-fourths of the state legislatures, even when the amendment was backed by the powerful influence of Theodore Roosevelt.

Twenty-one states have voted for the calling of a constitutional convention. A vote of 32 is necessary to call one.

When such a convention meets it can propose such an amendment, or amendments, and then three-fourths of the states must ratify the proposed changes to make them effective.

Limit to federal taxation is bringing action from the states. The proposal has been made to repeal the 16th amendment and substitute one that would limit the federal to 25 per cent, leaving a share for state and local governments.

With the federal government now owning a large portion of the land within the state boundaries and withholding it from state and local taxation and with the seizure of tide land oil, the federal government is depriving the states of a source of revenue. There are more and more sources of state revenue being jeopardized.

Many officials fear there will be nothing left on which to levy state taxes unless a way can be found to halt the grabbing of the source of state tax revenue.

When state and local governments can no longer finance their operations, they must, of necessity, pass out of existence, leaving all government functions to Congress.

A new concept of taxes on a national basis is needed. Certain levies should be provided for the support of the national government with no provisions for federal "grants in aid." Other tax fields should be left open to state and ocal governments.

That would be in line with what Congress has been talking without making any attempt to effectuate their idea. Now, a constitutional convention, called by 32 state legislatures, may start the idea rolling

Want to be sure about it all? Would you like to learn more about that "club" in the hands of the states? Read Article V of the Constitution of the United States. It is there, with the processes required well stated. A constitutional convention is in the making.

Our fears of the big, bad Russian Bear are home inspired, and that fear has been built for a partisan purpose. The people of Europe, 3,000 miles nearer the Red army than we are, have no thought of war with Russia. They are willing to fight if the needs come, but they have no expectation of an attack by Communistic Russia in any seeable future. Fact is, there is more likely to be a revolution within Russia, involving the Red army, than a World War III, but our home manufactured war scare provides an emergency for us. Emergencies were the foundation on which the bureaucratic army was started and has been built, and that is definitely partisan political.

MORAL BREAKDOWN

FBI Director Notes Athletic Scandals

WASHINGTON — J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, believes that the recent and current college athletic scandals, combined with the gangs of youthful hoodlums in large cities, indicate "a breakdown of the moral fiber of the country."

In a recent testimony made before a Senate Appropriations Committee, the FBI director said there "is much less respect for law and order." He cited cases in large cities where gangs of hoodlums run wild, with little respect for law.

The tendency to break away from "controls and discipline," he said, also extends to the colleges, many of them much too slack in scholastic requirements. Commercialized athletics is much at fault, he concluded.

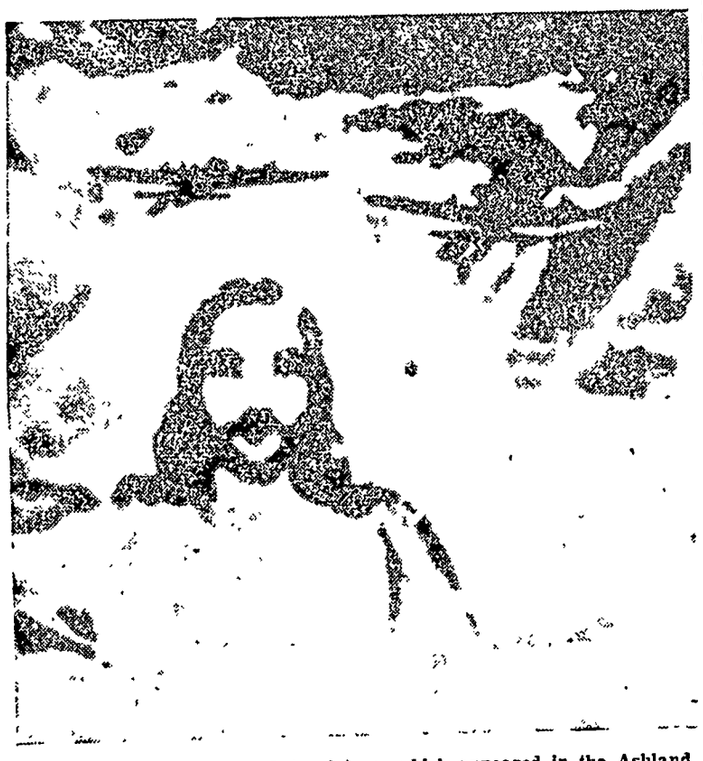
R.A.F. BLIMP COMES TO GRIEF . . . The "Bournemouth," an airship of the Royal Air Force, is shown with its shattered tail entangled in the roof of the R.A.F. station gymnasium at Cardington, England. The big gas bag had been making only its second flight when a trailing rope caught in the roof of the building and dragged the blimp down. Among the occupants of the unlucky craft was Lord Ventry, who managed to crawl to safety with crewmen of the big ship along the roof of the gymnasium and then to the ground. Because of the hazard of the escaping hydrogen, smoking was banned for a quarter mile radius.

WARM WELCOME . . . Five young eastern Europeans, who became the first aliens to be sworn into the U.S. army under the new alien enlistment act, are greeted by Lt. Eugene C. Egg, commanding officer of the alien enlistment section, at the 7720th EUCOM replacement depot, Sonthofen, Germany. They will be sent to the United States for basic training and then classified as to military occupations and assigned to the various military units of the army throughout the world. The five new enlistees include two Czechoslovakians, a Russian, a Hungarian, and a Ukrainian. The new law gives foreigners the chance to fight for freedom in our forces.



UNUSUAL PHOTO . . . This picture, which appeared in the Ashland (Ky.) Independent, was represented to the newspaper as an actual photograph taken in sky over Korea. A Chicago man was taking a photo of an American and Red plane in a fight. He sent the picture back to a relative in Chicago and a neighbor sent it to a brother in Ashland. Demand for the issue carrying the picture was so great it was sold out. The issue was repeated and it too was sold out.

AMERICA'S WHEATHEART . . . Miss Liberal, Kansas, Bette Renick, wears banner, "Wheatheart of the Nation, 1951," after she won title at 32nd annual birthday celebration in Perrytown. She wins an expense-paid trip to Havana, Cuba.

BABY BORN IN NIGHT CLUB . . . Margaret Barstow, Ciro's Sunset Strip night club hat check girl, created quite a stir recently when she gave birth to a baby right on the premises. The former A.A.U. swimming champion had a baby daughter, with a patron, Dr. Bert Tardieu, presiding as medical attendant. Here, she is shown holding the youngster who was born amid the bright lights, while hubby Bruce, a California Tech student, looks on.

NEW DAV CHIEF . . . Ewing W. Mays, 33, Little Rock, was elected national commander of the Disabled American Veterans during the organization's convention in Milwaukee. He is a double amputee, having lost both legs.

WALTER SHEAD, WNU Correspondent

Rejects Farm Groups

THE action of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor breaking off "diplomatic relations" with the two big farm organizations, the Farm Bureau and the National Grange, may have deep and lasting repercussions on both farm and labor legislation.

The AFL said that labor organizations could no longer appease these two farm organizations because they had "swung to the side of reaction."

"In fact on economic issues of vital concern to the national welfare it has become difficult," the AFL statement said, "to discern any major difference between the policy of the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange on the one hand, and that of the National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chamber of Commerce on the other."

And the statement added that farm workers are not in accord with the policies of these farm federations. The grange said today is no time to start a civil war between segments of the economy and the farm bureau answered the AFL by saying its policies have been democratically developed through county and state organizations.

This column has often pointed out how the farm and labor organizations often appear to work at cross-purposes when their aims should be identical. We have often quoted such men as Senator Aiken of Vermont, and other agricultural stalwarts as declaring against a policy of "divide and conquer" fostered by some segments of business and industry.

Unfortunately, it appears that there is considerable truth in the charges made by the labor organizations. There are in Washington several very effective propaganda organizations maintained by big business to guide the thinking of farmers in almost every phase of activity.

And it also is unfortunately true that the top leaders of both the grange and the farm bureau meet at frequent intervals with representatives of these propaganda agencies and their big business sponsors.

Do Good Policies

It is also true that officers and directors of these propaganda agencies in Washington are made up of representatives of both the farm organizations and big business, some of the directorates reading like a list of "Who's Who" in business, industry and agriculture.

Their policies are "do good policies" for the alleged benefit of the farmer, but the propaganda has been so effective that here of late, as the AFL says, "it has become difficult to discern any major difference between the policy of the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange on the one hand, and the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce on the other."

A Prediction

It may very well be that the policy of these two business organizations is the policy which farmers throughout the country wish to follow. But if they do follow them, one fine morning the farmers will wakeup and find that once more they are on their own, without a support price, without a parity price and with government clear "out of the agricultural business"; they will again be in the hands of their friends, the commodity exchanges, with only that old moth-eaten law of supply and demand to bulwark them against these same friends.

Farmers in Better Shape

The only difference, the farmers will find, is that it will take them longer to go broke than it did in the 20s and the 30s, for during the past 10 or 15 years they have paid off all or most of the farm mortgage, their land is in better shape due to conservation practices, they have been able to buy and pay for more and better machinery and equipment, most have new cars, all the conveniences of their city cousins, including electricity and all the modern trimmings. So they will have better and more collateral for more and bigger mortgages than they got in the 20s and 30s.

Loans Available

The banks and insurance companies also have more surplus money than they know what to do with so the farmer need not worry on that score, they will grab up his mortgage. But we just wonder if the operator of the family sized farm throughout this country really is in accord with the announced policies of the farm organizations. With the possible exception of food, the farmer is the same kind of a consumer as city folks.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

The First Step

THERE IS ALWAYS something you can do to satisfy your heart.

That restless, dissatisfied muscle that we call a heart, and to which we attribute so many emotions, pleasant, fearful, ashamed, glad, proud, can be handled intelligently just as teeth and eyes and nerves can be.

But you have to work on teeth and eyes, and you have to work on a heart. You have to think out what is wrong, and analyze it, and do something about it.

The First Step

To give you what you want, the work, the associations, the success, there is a first step that you can take. Think out that first step; take it, and the way to the next step will be clear.

Don't fuss along in a complaining, bewildered, frustrated state, feeling helpless. Don't waste energy envying anyone, envy is a destructive poison. But think your way into something nearer to your ideal, and you will find that you have helped not only yourself, but other women everywhere. The women who help us are not the ones for whom life has been rosy all the way; without exception they are women who have known poverty or obscurity, doubt or weariness, or all of these.

" . . . coach this child . . . "

For instance, Anne Ryan, whose story I wrote here years ago. She was agonizing with worry over two sons, 14 and 12, who gave every sign of going wild, in one of our great cities Anne borrowed money, not much, and bought a country place and took four or five other problem boys to board The result of that is part of our national story of child guidance.

Then there was a woman named Betty Jay. To this woman had come the frightful sorrow of a defective child, the type of child they call Mongolian There was an older child, vivid, brilliant, beautiful at 12. Betty Jay was almost mad with the agony of watching the growth of the two—the contrast between them

The poor afflicted baby knew her, clung to her A private institution was far beyond her means, and was far away, too. She could not give up little Kip she could not save her friends, family, even his sister and father from the strain of seeing and being near him.

She moved to the neighborhood of a public institution. She volunteered for work in the wards there. This was in wartime; she was made warmly welcome. So she cared for her child, and scores of others, all day long, and at night she crossed the road to the little cottage where her daughter and husband were waiting for her. She is widowed now, the daughter married, but Kip lives on, and his mother sees him and cares for him still.

Financial Problem

Kathryn David's problem was financial. To solve it she did not indulge in any great flights of fancy about large sums of money that should turn the David's rich overnight. No, she began, almost accidentally, to earn 25 cents now and then, and the 25 centses added themselves together into success.

Kathryn lived in a large country town; she had a boy and a girl who had trouble with homework. Hearing a neighbor complain of her own child's school rating, Kathryn offered to coach this child with her own, for 25 cents for an evening. This was 20 years ago.

The twelve children who almost at once somehow got into this class, naturally insured her $3 a night. Not much to start with, but Kathryn, grayheaded now, and a proud grandmother, is superintendent and president today of a great three-story school building where children who have difficulties with one type of work or another are graded and helped.

Of my "apron woman" I've written here before. This little English emigree was almost the first person who wrote me when I started these articles. She sent me a little girl's apron of light ticking, a sort of grown-up bib, with pockets. The washing it saved was beyond belief, and I wrote her that I thought there was a market for these aprons. She found it; a big market.

But of course most of the men and women who intelligently think of the first step out of the rut don't make fortunes, don't get talked about.

Ball Commissioner Has Problems

By GRANTLAND RICE

(In connection with these partly phony five and six-inning ball games.)

Once upon a midnight dreary—
(This is all I'll steal from Poe)
While I pondered, bored and weary,
On these half-blown games we know.
Games of five and seven innings
Stopped by edict or by rain,
Which from their dull, drab beginnings
Leave their customers in pain.

Once upon a midnight dreary—
(On this line I seem to dwell)
While I pondered, somewhat leery,
On the game we like so well—
Why not label them as "call games,"
Which is what they are today?
Look for just one-inning ball games
If these dopes can get their way.

Work for Commissioner

Just about every time we turn around and face a new direction we seem to find more work for the new baseball commissioner.

We have heard many arguments that the new commissioner will have little to do. You won't find two cleaner, more honest operators than Ford Frick and Will Harridge, the two league presidents But apparently the various club owners won't allow them much working space.

Grantland Rice

If so, I don't believe they would have allowed these stupid five, six or seven-inning ball games A ball game is supposed to be nine innings, just as a golf course is supposed to be 18 holes or a football game four periods

The state of Pennsylvania has a 7 o'clock curfew law on Sundays. So teams playing the Athletics might as well take a set of dice to the ball park and play it that way

The National League has a far fairer rule "Unfinished games in Philadelphia or Pittsburgh are simply called suspended games," says Ford Frick. "They must be finished later I might add that I am in favor of games called by rain after the fourth inning A game is legal after four and a half or five innings. But I don't believe in four and one half and five-inning ball games. I'd like to see such games completed later."

Ford Frick happens to be one of the most farsighted of all the group that run baseball. He certainly has a big jump on the American League in this respect.

Just how and why the American League could stand for these incomplete games is beyond most of us.

You would think that such sportsmen as Tom Yawkey, Dan Topping, Del Webb, Walter Briggs, Ellis Ryan and others would have seen this half-game weakness years ago.

This is one of the many reasons that a hard-boiled commissioner is needed, of the Judge Landis type—although Judge Landis along with Happy Chandler had nothing to say about this weak spot in baseball's make-up.

It's about time someone did.

The Racing Race

In the past few years one stable, Calumet, has dominated racing to a large extent. Maine Chance started the stampede six or seven years back when Mrs. Graham had a full list of thoroughbred stars. Last year Mrs. Dodge Sloan's Brookmeade, handled by Preston Burch, took over. Those were the only two gaps in Calumet's winning record.

It is now different in the waning season of 1951. Calumet is still strong. But so are Brookmeade, Greentree, George Widener's stable and one or two others, including C. V. Whitney. Citation gave the Jones boys a big lift. So did Wistful and Bewitch.

But Calumet must now come on with a new crop to meet the challenge of Greentree, Brookmede, Widener and others.

George Widener has set some sort of a record by offering the top three-year-olds of 1951 without winning the Derby, Preakness or Belmont.

His Battlefield has been the most consistent horse of the year in the three-year-old division.

Uncle Miltie was the big disappointment of the season after a brilliant start.

You can write this down as a big season for the Whitneys and Johnny Gaver of Greentree, who have moved up with a rush in the last two months, East and West.

The Next Football Season

No one, not even a professional pessimist, has to worry about the next college football season. Not even West Point's trouble can slow it down. But if there should be any slowing down the pro game will haul in all the slack.

This was pretty well proved by two opening attendance figures in Los Angeles and Chicago last week. Each mark came to some 92,000 paid customers, a total of 184,000 for the two opening games.

55 Rural schools reopened last fall. (1950-51 school year)

49 Rural schools reopened this fall. (1951-52 school year)

Six schools closed — three for the lack of pupils.

Only three beginning teachers in the county school system.

Twelve (12) the teaching on substitute teachers certificates which are a special type of certificate, and good for only 90 teaching days.

Of the twenty-one (21) teachers who taught last fall and are not teaching in the county, many are not teaching in any other county to our knowledge.

Five schools reopened wee' late due to the fact that no qualified teachers were available, not even persons with substitute teachers certificates

Town schools and Consolidated schools in most cases have all the elementary pupils they can handle. An examination of the housing situtation in the county should make it clear that further closing of rural schools and the sending of the pupils to town is not the final answer until added housing facilities are available for the children.

In my opinion the need for qualified teachers in the rural schools of Hancock County is the most acute it has been in the past ten years.

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded businesses and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

If the shop or factory where you work was suddenly destroyed by fire, what would happen to your job?

Chances are you would be out of work till the plant could be rebuilt And you and your family would suffer the consequences.

That's why your Iowa Safety Congress warns: Don't be burned out of your job because you were careless on the job.

Carelessness is the major cause of fire. Make fire prevention part of your job Be extra careful with matches and cigarettes, dispose of oily rags, don't let rubbish and litter pile up, and learn where fire extinguishers are kept and how to operate them.

Last year 4,267 fires in Iowa destroyed more than nine million dollars worth of property. The death loss reached a new all-time high of 158

Almost half of this loss was in business and industral establishments, yet the dollar loss was only a fraction of the total destruction caused by fire. The indirect losses, in medical costs, in jobs, wages and production lost, savings reduced and business failures, were probably two or three times greater.

Remember Fire hurts everybody! Stop fires — save jobs!

the Highway Story

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

Faith is a marvelous, sustaining gift, except when it is misleading. Specifically, faith that things of the highway will always continue in an orderly, expected manner is dangerous. Clyde Walters was one who had that kind of "faith."

Clyde had the entire day at his disposal. All he had to do was drive 15 miles to a neighboring town and spend the rest of the time visiting with his brother, just home from Korea

But Clyde, as we said, had "faith." He seemed to believe that 20 years' driving experience proved that the highways of his county could offer nothing new or unexpected in the way of hazards - nothing he hadn't met and dealt with before. Perhaps that was why he started out to drive the short distance at 70 and 75 miles an hour.

For 14 miles, nothing happened to make Clyde in any way an "unbeliever" He slipped around traffic in his usal casual manner. He noticed nothing new or different along the road. As usual, he paid no attention to the speed warning sign

Probably his "faith" left him the moment he slammed across the hill and saw the new barricade across the highway and the detour signs pointing sharp right.

He must have had no more than a dim, frantic hope left as he hit his brakes and tried to turn. And, in the first sickening sense of unbalance as the car began to roll, he must have become an "unbeliver" in the constancy of anything on the highway

LARGE CROWD ATTENDED RECEPTION FOR TEACHERS FRIDAY EVENING

"Beauty Queen" Selection Climaxed Stage Show At High School

Several hundred people attended the annual reception for the Klemme teachers held at the gymnasium Friday evening. The affair was sponsored by the ladies of the two Klemme churches and the Music Mothers Club.

Ernie Gerardi "emceed" an hour's variety stage show of musical numbers, a skit, talks by Rev. Jaberg & Rev. Egeland, climaxed by selection of The Klemme "Queen" by members of the school board, town council and Mayor Cook. This feature of the program was a near roit but Herbie Pearson was the unanimous selection by the judges and was presented the key to the town by the Mayor. Other characters in the running were. Harvey Hubbard, Graydon Back, Kenneth Kluckhohn, Merlin Brinkman, Calvin Josten, Wilbur Haefner and Jim Carlson. The latter candidate came on stage as "The Thing" and and proceeded to put on a striptease show that was stopped just in the nick of time . . . or was it?

Supt. "Tokie" Ahrenkiel had some difficulty getting past "The Thing" on his way to the stage to introduce the teaching staff

After the program the rooms were open for inspection and teachers were in their places to get acquainted with the parents. Parents visited both high school and grade rooms and then adjorned to the grade school dining room where a nice lunch was served.

Everybody had a fine time and many remarked that they would like to have more gatherings during the winter months. Some suggested that the old P. T. A. be revived and hold monthly programs and meetings. Perhaps that is an idea to be worked out.

Tempt the Family with Well Seasoned Vegetables
(See Recipes Below)

Flavorful Vegetables

THERE ARE COUNTLESS ways to vary the flavor of vegetables and thus make them more interesting to the palate. But how often homemakers fall into a rut, serving the same vegetables year after year, always seasoned the same way, butter, salt and pepper!

Then comes a day when the family refuses to be tempted by vegetables any longer. They continue to appear on the menu, but most often are the only food left on the plate. Rather than have this waste, it's better to offer the family such well-seasoned vegetables they cannot refuse them.

Here's an old-fashioned way to prepare cabbage, simple but delicious:

Pennsylvania Dutch Pepper Cabbage
(Serves 6)

- 1 small head cabbage (2 pounds)
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 medium onion, grated
- ¼ cup sugar
- ⅔ cup cream
- ⅔ cup cider vinegar
- 1 green or red pepper, chopped

Chop cabbage fine. Add salt, onion and sugar. Let stand 1 hour. Blend cream and vinegar. Pour over cabbage. Add pepper and mix well.

- 2 cups whole beets

Tomatoes with Spinach

- 2 tablespoons bread crumbs
- 2 cups cooked spinach
- 4 tablespoons grated cheese
- 2 tablespoons butter
- ½ teaspoon basil, if desired

Cut off a thin slice from each tomato, hollow out part of center, sprinkle with salt and invert. This seasons the tomato and draws out excess water. LYNN SAYS:
Use your Leftovers In Sauces, Dressings

Wise cooks never throw away even small amounts of food like a tablespoon or two, left in a bottle or a jar. Use them with white sauce or mayonnaise to dress up other foods.

Tartar dressing for fish is easily made from a tablespoon of capers, another of chopped parsley, 2 tablespoons of chopped olives and 2 tablespoons of pickle relish added to 1 cup of mayonnaise.

Celery dressing makes use of the last of the celery stalk. Add ¼ cup of finely chopped celery and 1 tablespoon of chopped green pepper to one cup of mayonnaise.

To one cup of white sauce, medium, may be added ½ cup of any of the following for a delicious sauce: mushrooms, lobster or shrimp.

Thousand Island uses the last ¼ cup of chili sauce in your bottle with a tablespoon each of chopped green pepper and chopped stuffed olives in 1 cup of mayonnaise.

Crime in America

Two of a Series

The Wire Service: Public Enemy No. 1

The nationwide crime syndicate became "big business" during prohibition. So when the "noble experiment" ended, the gangs had to look for a new money-maker. Narcotics were profitable but limited. Organized prostitution has been made difficult by the Mann (white slavery) Act. Thus, the mobs turned to illegal gambling, which now, according to the experts, has become a 17 billion dollar annual racket.

"Gambling," said "Betting Commissioner" James J. Carroll, an unwilling and television-shy witness in the final days of our Senate Crime Committee hearings, "is a biological necessity for certain types . . . the quality that gives substance to their day dreams."

No varieties of this "biological necessity" were overlooked by the mobs—slot machines, punchboards, cards, dice, roulette, wagers on sporting events and the "numbers" racket. But the big killing came when they successfully penetrated illegal bookmaking on horse races. Thereby, a vast and corrupting new industry—the gang-dominated wire service—was born.

The colossus of the racing news industry today is an organization known as Continental Press service a virtual monopoly.

From Arthur M. (Mickey) McBride, of Cleveland, Ohio, and his bald, seemingly disingenuous brother-in-law, Tom Kelly, of Chicago, both of whom were unhappy witnesses, we obtained a remarkable biography of Continental press.

McBride insists he started Continental on a modest $20,000 bankroll purely out of sentiment and good will to provide a job for his brother-in-law, Kelly.

The new wire service set up elaborate precautions. Instead of selling "news" direct to bookies, Continental set up "regional distributors" to whom it sold its service. Continental would gather the racing news through an elaborate nationwide system and would telegraph this information to its distributors. McBride himself admitted that Continental got the news out of the race tracks "by either going in and paying a concession price, or taking it out otherwise." The "otherwise" included use of spies with high powered telescopes and "wig-wag" men.

The distributors, in turn, passed the news for a price to thousands of illegal bookies all over the country. Continental was not supposed to know anything about that. "I," McBride irrelevantly remarked, "never have been in a bookmaking joint in 25 years." Finally Mickey wearily acknowledged the obvious fact that "certainly" Continental's news "eventually got to bookmakers."

We isolated instances where parties, supposedly operating as independent distributors, actually kept only small salaries or percentages and remitted thousands of dollars—the bulk of their profits—to Continental.

From Mickey McBride, who appeared at the Cleveland hearings in a suit of "race-track plaid," hand-painted suspenders and a very sincere bow tie, we elicited the tortuous story of how Continental's ownership shifted back and forth between the McBrides and the Ragen family. Mickey himself never wanted to run Continental, so in the beginning he went to an old colleague, the late James M Ragen Sr., and asked him if he would take over. In 1942 McBride said he sold out to Ragen's son, James M. Ragen Jr. The following year Ragen Sr. took over and put pressure on Mickey to return to the business.

Mickey compromised by buying one-third of Continental back for $50,000 as an investment for his son, Eddie, then 19 years old.

Ragen's difficulties with the Capone syndicate actually went back a number of years, but in 1946 he ran head-on into trouble. The Chicago-Capone mob had been eyeing Continental Press; if they could seize control it not only would provide them with a Golconda of profits but would be a source of jobs for literally thousands of hoodlums.

The mob's initial approach was in the form of a conciliatory but thoroughly dishonest proposition, advanced by three leading syndicate members, Jake (Greasy Thumb) Guzik, Tony (The Enforcer) Accardo and Murray (The Camel) Humphreys. The mob sweetly insisted that all it wanted to do was to cut itself in and help build up the business.

As Ragen saw the picture, however, once the mob had moved in and had gained sufficient experience to dispense with his "know-how," he would be found some morning dead in an alley.

As part of the incredible scenario, according to Ragen, the Capone interests used Dan Serritella as their emissary Serritella had served in the Illinois legislature as a senator for 12 years, during part of which period he also was engaged in the business of publishing a scratch sheet. He had been a friend and business associate of Ragen's enemy, Greasy Thumb Guzik, and Serrietella told us how Guzik had advanced him $15,000 to $20,000 to start up one scratch sheet venture in which they shared the profits 50-50.

At the outset, the Capone mob countered Ragen's opposition by starting a rival wire service called Trans-American Publishing and News Service. Through its superior gang connections, Trans-American made deep inroads into Continental's business In Chicago opposition to Continental was sparked by the mob's wire outlet, a mysterious outfit known as "R&H."

A less stubborn man might have let the Capone mob take over the nationwide bookie racket. Possibly, if he had, Ragen would have been alive today. But he kept on fighting until, on June 24, 1946, just as he had predicted, he was ambushed and mowed down with shotgun blasts on a Chicago street.

Ragen's murder is one of Chicago's many unsolved gang slayings, just as is the more recent murder of former Police Lieutenant William Drury. Drury was shot to death the evening before he was to have talked to an investigator about appearing as a witness before the committee.

Then suddenly in May 1947, Mickey McBride came back into the picture. He bought Continental back from the Ragen interests. The price was $370,000 payable over a period of 10 years, and the business was to be the sole and exclusive property of young Eddie.

With the Ragens gone, Trans-American folded the very next month, and peace was restored. All the bitterness apparently was forgotten and many of the old Trans-American-Capone crowd came right in with Continental.

Mickey McBride and all the Continental crowd vigorously and emphatically deny the existence of any deals or connections whatsoever with the Capone-Chicago syndicate, but evidence before the committee indicates otherwise.

R&H even fixed its own rate for such service at $750 a week, which, by comparison with amounts charged other non-mob outfits for similar service, was a ridiculously low figure.

But finally McBride agreed that "the seniors did all the talking" and that young Eddie, at least, "didn't open his mouth at any time."

The committee reported to the senate.

"From the preponderance of evidence . . . a conclusion is warranted that the Continental Press service is controlled not by Edward McBride . . . but by the gangsters who constitute the Capone syndicate . . that Arthur McBride is deliberately making a gift to the Mafi-affiliated Capone mob in Chicago of about $4,000 a week, which represents the difference in price paid by the Capone-controlled R&H service and the price paid by their competitors in the same city." In my opinion, the way to cope with the problem would be a bill placing a legal straitjacket on Continental and on any other wire services that might spring up.

In 1942 when California feared air attack by the Japanese, a vital telegraph circuit which served an air force field was knocked out by a plane crash. Continental Press managed to get its wire service for the gamblers resumed in something like 15 minutes It took the Fourth army, responsible for the defense of the entire West Coast, something like three hours

Indictment of Newsmen Stirs People

LAKE CHARLES, La.—The indictment of five newspapermen has aroused public indignation and almost doubled the membership of the Peoples Action Group, which fights gambling and corruption.

Thomas B. Shearman, publisher of the Lake Charles American Press and four assistants are charged with defaming a trio of gamblers and 16 parish (county) officials. The peoples group had attempted to get an indictment against the parish sheriff on charges of malfeasance, but the Grand Jury returned an indictment against the newsmen instead.

Senator Kefauver commented: "I certainly hope the citizens of Louisiana will rise to the defense of these courageous men to expose the gambling situation in their Parish."

This Nebraska Farmer Says:
"FIRESTONE OPEN CENTERS FOR ME"

"I farm 320 acres of bottom land. Sometimes it gets pretty dry and hard, and other times it gets soft and sticky. I like the Firestone Open Centers for my farm because, no matter what condition the ground's in, I can always depend on them to do a good job. In my opinion they're the best all-around tires a farmer can use."
Glenn Stauffer, Meadow Grove, Neb.

AMONG THE OPEN CENTER BUYERS MORE AND MORE FARMERS CHOOSE

Firestone CHAMPIONS

FROM across the road all open center tires look about the same, but from a tractor seat farmers soon see why the Firestone Open Center outpulls all other open center tires.

Watch a Firestone Open Center in operation. You can see how the sharp taper of its bars makes them bite their way into the ground . . . You can see how the curved design of the bars makes them cup the soil for a stronger hold . . . You can see how the Flared Openings between the bars let the soil fall free to keep the tread clean. You'll find the Firestone Champion the best open center tire you can use.

Of course there are over a million farmers who would rather have a traction center type of tire, and if that's the kind you prefer, get the one and only Firestone Traction Center.

HUNSLEY VISITS KLEMME; SCARES EDITOR!

Ray Hunsley of Britt, Hancock County Weed Commissioner, was in Klemme and vicinity last Thursday.

Ray had his head tilted at an upward angle . . . and that is a danger sign. If the wind is just right Ray can sniff an obnoxious weed over in the next county.

The Editor saw Hunsley coming up the street, so the Editor high-tailed it for home. It so happens that the last time our lawn was mowed we found a Canadian thistle growing in a remote corner of the yard.

Now the Editor likes Canada and that thistle is about as near as we would get to Canada this year. We just sort of petted that thistle along . . . until we saw Hunsley with his big nose pointed in the direction of the Editor's yard.

Ha, ha, Ray couldn't find the thistle! We beat him to it!

Poultrymen Cautioned on Using Medicated Water

Poultry producers have been warned to keep a close check on the water intake of chickens and turkeys receiving medicated drinking water.

Certain types of medication, such as sulfonamide drugs, give the water a bitter taste and the birds may not drink enough to maintain normal health and egg production.

Veterinary medical authorities report that turkey poults have a strong dislike for some of the medications used in feed and drinking water to curb the spread of infectious diseases. There have been instances where poults refused to drink sulfonamide-treated water and died of dehydration.

The veterinarians also caution that flocks on range will pass up medicated water if there is a stagnant pool or stream they can drink from instead. In such instances, the purpose of the water treatment is defeated and diseases may get a golden opportunity to strike.

Medicated drinking water sometimes serves a useful purpose in keeping down the spread of infections, but it is not a substitute for good sanitation and efficient flock management.

Veterinarians prescribe water medication only when it does not reduce the birds' water intake to a dangerous level and when it does not produce toxic effects. The flock should be watched closely and at the first sign of harmful effects, use of the drug should be discontinued.

Severe Pneumonia Cases Cured With Terramycin

Of 25 patients with severe cases of pneumonia, 100 per cent were cured when treated with terramycin, according to reports by a group of four doctors at the Columbia-Presbyterian hospital in New York.

Authors of the report were Doctors George W. Melcher, Jr., Count D. Gibson, Jr., Harry M. Rose, and Yale Kneeland. Eighteen of the cases were bacterial lobar pneumonia, and seven were virus (primary atypical) pneumonia. The results indicated, according to the doctors, that "terramycin is remarkably effective in the treatment of both types of infection."

There were no complications, and all patients made a rapid and complete recovery. Among the patients with lobar pneumonia, with the exception of one subject, the doctors said there was "a dramatic fall in the temperature within 24 to 36 hours after the first dose of terramycin was given." Temperatures of the virus-pneumonia patients fell within 36 hours after the first does of terramycin.

The doctors found no serious toxic effects attributable to the terramycin therapy, and in only 9 of the 25 cases did any symptoms of gastrointestinal irritation occur. "These resembled the symptoms seen after the administration of aureomycin", the doctors reported, "but seemed less severe". In all cases, terramycin was administered by mouth.

Children's Hearing Defects

Early symptoms of hearing trouble can be detected only by pure tone audiometric testing. Homemade tests using watches, soft whispers and tuning forks, are unreliable and merely weed out the most obvious cases. Because of the extreme sensitivity of the ear, a considerable impairment can exist without being apparent. Thus, many children with hearing defects are unaware of their subnormal hearing. Their parents and teach-

Pioneer in Bessemer

Alexander L. Holley, one of the leaders in developing the bessemer steelmaking process in the United States, was also a steel plant and rolling mill designer. He purchased the English patents of the bessemer process in 1863, and subsequently combined them with the Kelly patents in this country. Important among Holley's inventions were the "intermediate ladle" which allowed the weighing of each charge of iron to the converter, and the movable furnace bottom for ease in repair.

Ancient Scrolls Displayed

Three ancient Hebrew scrolls found in a cave south of Jericho in 1947 and since acclaimed by experts as the greatest single manuscript discovery of modern times, and the most important find ever made in the Holy Land, have been placed on public display in the Library of Congress. This is the first time that these much publicized documents have ever been shown to the general public anywhere in the world. Believed to be over 2,000 years old, the three Hebrew scrolls include, among others of the sacred writings, a copy of the complete text of the Book of Isaiah in the original.

Growth of Children

Do boys grow faster than girls? A child's greatest growth in any one year is from birth to the age of one. However, during the adolescent period, usually from nine to thirteen in girls and from 11 to 15 in boys, they again make great gains both in height and weight. Then the rate of growth slows down until adult size is reached, at about 16 for the average girl and 17 for the average boy.

Obituary of Mrs. Schlichting

Mrs. William Schlichting whose departure from this life, although not entirely unexpected, is sincerely regretted and sorrowfully mourned by her loved ones, relatives, acquaintances and friends.

Mrs. Schlichting whose maiden name was Bertha Kemp was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Kemp and was born in Germany on June 18, 1875. She came to America as a youth of thirteen years and lived with her parents in their new home at Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Mrs. Schlichting was united in the bonds of Holy matrimony with Mr. William Schlichting on October 2, 1896. In 1896 the young couple spent three years farming in Minnesota and then they moved to Klemme, Iowa where they resided for three years and then moved to the farm four and a half miles northwest of Goodell where they lived until 1941 when they retired from active farming and moved to their home in the village of Goodell.

During the past half century Mrs. Schlichting has been a member of the Immanual Evangelical and Reformed Church in Klemme and has been as active as circumstances would permit. In recent years she partook of the sacrament of Holy Communion, as becometh all Christians, in her home, because of her illness.

Mrs. Schlichting has suffered periodically from the effects of failing health, and has been somewhat confined to her home in recent years. She always took pride in doing her work and keeping up her home, in as much as it was possible. Mrs. Schlichting showed some definite signs of failing health on the first day of the year of 1951 and on Thursday morning September 20 she departed from this earthly life having attained the age of 76 years, 3 months and 2 days.

Mrs. Schlichting is survived by one son, Albert of Ventura and two daughters: Mrs. Gilbert Kropp of Goodell and Leona at home, and three brothers, Mr. Frank Kemp and Mr. Theodore Kemp of Goodell and Mr. Otto Kemp of Fort Dodge.

She was preceeded in death by her husband, Mr. William Schlichting, two sisters, Mrs. Alma Lauden and Miss Martha Kemp and one brother, Mr. Paul Kemp.

"For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." II Corinthians 5:4

Jesus, keep me near the cross;
There a precious fountain,
Free to all--a healing stream
Flows from Calvary's mountain,
In the cross, in the cross,
Be my glory ever
Till my raptured soul shall find
Rest beyond the river

TUBERCULAR CASES BEING LOCATED IN HANCOCK

Mrs. Ann Garrard, public health nurse, is conducting the contact case—finding program now in progress in Hancock county. At the request of the family physician, she has been visiting persons who may have had close contact with cases of tuberculosis, or others whom the doctor feels needs to be included in the survey.

She is advising these persons to have tuberculin tests made by their physicians and if recommended, a chest X-ray. The X-rays will be taken in the mobile unit provided by the State Department of Health and the Iowa Tuberculosis and Health Association.

This survey is being paid for in part by the Hancock county Tuberculosis (and health) Association with funds from the annual sale of Christmas Seals. The date when the X-ray unit will be in the county will be announced later.

"We are trying to find undiscovered tuberculosis in its early stage when it is most curable," Mrs. Garrard said. She explained that it is possible to have tuberculosis and not be aware of it.

"It's just good sense for persons who have been exposed to tuberculosis to find out if they have tuberculosis germs in their bodies."

New Giant Atom Smasher Undergoes Initial Tests

Satisfactory initial tests of the University of Chicago's $2,500,000 synchrocyclotron, giant atom smasher, have been made after three and one-half years spent on design and construction, Samuel K. Allison, director of the University's Institute for Nuclear Studies, announced.

Deuterons, the nuclei of heavy hydrogen atoms, have been accelerated to an energy of 250 million electron volts, the highest known energy ever achieved artificially with these atomic particles.

Herbert L. Anderson, professor of physics in the Institute, and John Marshall, assistant professor, who directed design and construction of the big accelerator, conducted the tests.

Next step in getting the Chicago instrument into final working order will be to produce a focussed beam of protons, the nuclei of ordinary hydrogen. In the test, the deuterons were not brought outside the magnetic field.

The energy attained with deuterons indicates the synchrocyclotron will accelerate protons to energies of the order of 450 million electron-volts, making it the most powerful accelerator of positive ions in the western world.

Female of the Species Tends to Outlive Male

The American female contradicts the description "weaker sex" by showing markedly greater tenacity for survival than the male of the species at each year of life.

This is evidenced by the higher death rates that prevail for males as compared with females for every age group.

The advantage enjoyed by females is greatest in the late teens and early 20's, when the mortality among men is almost 90 per cent higher that that of women, and again in the early 50's when the excess in male mortality is about 75 to 80 per cent. The least differences in mortality are in early childhood and at the later ages of life.

"The situation today is in marked contrast with that a half century ago, when the disparity in the death rate between the sexes was considerately less," statisticians report. "Then the greatest excess of male over female mortality occurred in the first year of life, but amounted to only 21 per cent. At many ages the death rates for the sexes were about the same, and at ages 15 and 16 the rate for males fell below that for females."

Use For Lignin

Proof that Lignin, the paper industry's most troublesome waste product, is an excellent reinforcing agent for natural, nitrile, and neoprene rubber, as well as for GR-S, the general purpose synthetic, was offered at the closing session of the spring meeting of the American Chemical Society's Division of Rubber Chemistry. Nitrile and neoprene are two of the major types of synthetic rubber. Added to natural rubber in proportions of 50 to 100 pounds per 100 pounds of rubber, lignin was found to give higher tensile strengths than any other pigment at the same volumes, including carbon black.

Get Type For Purpose

There are various types of interior varnishes. Each is made according to the purpose it is to serve. Generally speaking, interior varnishes are harder—but not as resistant to weather—as exterior varnishes. Floor varnishes, for instance, are characterized by a high resistance to abrasion in order to withstand constant traffic. Another type, furniture varnish, must not soften under the heat of the body.

Three-Way Bed Warmer

A versatile electric sleeping pad which at the flick of a switch can be set to warm the feet only, the back only, or the entire bed has been introduced. The pad is spread over the mattress like an ordinary mattress pad and then is covered with sheets.

Alike Under Skin

The differences between races are very superficial. All men belong to the same zoological species, known as Homo sapiens, and their blood is the same. It is not possible to tell by microscopic examination, or by any other known tests, what race of man a given sample of blood came from.

Quick Market

Oysters are one of the many perishable food crops that are marketed by telephone. Cargoes often are sold while they are en route in refrigerator cars. Oysters are grown by oyster farmers in coastal waters. The beds are tended carefully and it takes about five years to mature a crop.

Cleaning Leather

Leather can be cleaned by washing with mild soap and water. Mud is hard on leather, so remove it from shoes as soon as possible; wash it off with warm water and then rub oil or grease into the leather while it is still damp. This prevents the shoes from drying stiff and hard. For heavy shoes, oils, tallow, and grease are good lubricants.

AROUND IOWA

RECOVERING—

One year old Leonard Pursell is convalescing at the Winterset hospital, after being run over by a truck at his home near there. The front wheel passed over his chest.

WRONG CATCH—

Ed. Epsminger caught a big one on a cast at Lake Fisher, near Bloomfield; to-wit: his 7 months old up "Putsy" who swallowed hook, line and sinker. The dog is recovering.

CHEAPER THEN—

As Ralph Matheson looked over the abstract of title on his home in Williamsburg, he noted that just 100 years ago the first entry was made. In 1851, Richard Williams paid $1.25 per acre for the 40-acre tract on which the Matheson home now stands.

TWINS—

Mrs. Lily Hicks and Mrs. Ella Edwards, twins, observed their 35th birthday together recently at Brooklyn, Iowa.

SAVED—

7-year old Paul Dieckmann, of Algona, saved the life of 4-year-old Bruce Brown of Forest City, at Clear Lake recently. The little fellow fell off the dock on his head.

VISITOR—

A banded homing pigeon was found by the Paul Mousel family at their home in Rockwell City. It now shows up at the Mousel home every morning for a bite to eat, then disappears until the following morning. Apparently it has no intention of going "home," wherever it is.

LANDMARK—

One of the old landmarks of Pocahontos county was destroyed by lightning recently, a big barn on the Carl Elsen home north of Manson. The barn was built in 1889

FILMING—

Dallas County court house records at Adel are now being "micro-filmed," so that County Clerk Geo. Bennett may store the original records and have a little more room 54,000 pages will be filmed.

DROWNED—

Steven French, a 2-year-old Martelle youngster, lost his life by drowning when he fell into a stock tank on the farm of his parents. Efforts to revive the lad were unsuccessful.

Two-dollar bills are bad bad luck—ony if you don't have enough of them.

Give Thin-Shelled Eggs More Careful Handling

Many Iowa farm flock owners may soon be faced with a large number of cracked eggs as a result of the recent hot, dry spell

Frank Wollney, extension poultryman at Iowa State College, says that long periods of high temperature and the fact that most hens are completing a full year of production are the main causes of the thinshelled eggs, which crack easily The only solution to this problem is for flock owners to use greater care in handling the eggs after they are gathered.

Wollney says insulated houses will help some in keeping temperatures from affecting the hens, but better management practices are the best answer to the problem He recommends gathering eggs one additional time daily to reduce the number broken in the nests. And while gathering them, he recommends filling the egg baskets only half full The thin-shelled eggs require extra care in handling if they are to receive a premium as high-quality eggs.

Eggs with cracked shells are almost always graded as Grade C or as No 3 eggs. With the expected flow of thin-shelled eggs during the next few weeks, Wollney says it will be necessary to make these changes in management to reduce breakage resulting from the thin shell.

Better Artificial Limb Made for War Amputees

Soldiers who have lost hands in the Korea fighting are fitted with a new type of artificial limb that provides better control and grasping power

After trial on a few selected cases the number of arm amputees now fitted with the new limb has increased to 28. The most recent cases were Korean casualties.

During and after the last war, most of the amputees considered hooks as the best substitute for a hand. They usually were made of prongs. Multiple rubber bands or springs were used to provide the closing action. The prong-type hooks, however, provide no control over the amount of pressure which the amputee might apply to any object grasped.

The newer limb—either artificial hands or hooks—can be activated by arm muscles themselves. A surgical technique has been developed to attach the muscles to the device, giving the amputee better control with less conspicuous movements.

The surgeon incorporates a loop of skin from the arm into the muscle which is drawn through a puncture wound of the stump. The control cable, which works the device, is attached to this loop of skin and muscle by a plastic pin.

Volcano a Relief Valve For Earth's Pressures

Scientists attribute the causes of volcanoes to the fact that rocks of the Earth become hotter with depth, and eventually get so hot that they would melt were it not for the great pressure of the overlying layers. Sometimes this pressure may be relieved locally and temporarily and then the hot rock does melt.

This also allows steam and gases contained in the rock to exert tremendous pressure on the surrounding rock walls. If a vent is found to the surface the molten rock and associated gases will escape. Perhaps the fluid extrudes quietly and lava flows without violence, but with a large proportion of included gases, the eruption may be violent and break the surface with explosive force.

Hardened lava and accumulated ash may build up a cone which finally is sealed off by congealed lava. Perhaps underground pressure will build up again and there follows a new period of activity. Thus, it is seen, volcanoes are really safety valves that relieve gas pressures built up inside the Earth.

Atomic Energy In Sun

Scientists believe that the sun (like other stars) keeps going by a process in which four nuclei of hydrogen atoms combine to form one nucleus of a helium atom, and by which atomic energy is released near the Sun's center. This energy reaches the solar surface and is radiated as light and heat, some reaching the earth. All the energy we use originates in this way.

Why Arteries Harden

No one knows why arteries harden. Heredity seems to be a factor, but that doesn't explain why ancestors developed the disease. There is no evidence to place the blame on tobacco, alcohol, hard work, or emotional disturbances.

The Largest Mammal

A whale is not a fish, but a mammal, like cows, dog and human beings. It is the largest animal, reaching a length of more than 100 feet and a weight of over 200 tons. The largest true fishes are the sharks

For a Very Young Lady

A clothes closet designed for a very young lady—one that can grow up as she does—has a low rod that can be raised as dresses and coats are lengthened. It also has easily-reached compartments for underthings, sweaters and sleepers so that she can learn to put everything in its place. There is a section, too, for hats and berets. On one of the double doors is a hook for her nightie and a rack for her bedroom slippers. Above them, on a painted blue background, sails a new moon and silver stars, indicating that the garment below is for night time. On the second door is painted the rising sun, a reminder that the bathrobe hung beneath it is for morning wear. Painted on each compartment are the names of the garments to be found within.

Pocketbook Cooperation

Nowadays you pay less for Venetian blinds because of the quality finishes developed by industrial finish engineers. Manufacturers can now finish a coil of flat steel or aluminum—or long strips of wood—at one time. These strips, after being coated with modern, fast-drying flexible finishes, are cut into exact length, thus reducing production costs.

Telephone Wires

Iron wire was used on early telephone lines, but it was not the best conductor. Copper was much better, but in 1878-1880 was too soft to be strung outdoors. So one telephone man put in about five years developing hard-drawn copper wire, which had the conductivity of copper with almost the tensile strength of iron.

Oil Shale May Be Major Source of Liquid Fuel

Colorado oil shale which may some day be a major source of liquid fuel for the nation contains little or no oil in its natural state, according to a report by four Bureau of Mines investigators to the American Chemical Society.

Laboratory studies of selected samples showed that shale is composed of organic material and minerals, the organic matter being the part which yields oil when sufficient heat is applied. Iron, aluminum, calcium, magnesium, sulfur, sodium and potassium were among the minerals found.

Oil-shale deposits of the Green River formation exist over an estimated area of 16,500 square miles in adjoining portions of Colorado, Utah, and Wyoming These deposits constitute a potential source of liquid fuel which is estimated at 300 billion barrels of oil, or several times our known petroleum resources. The richest and most accessible oil shales of this formation are in western Colorado. A laboratory investigation has been made of six selected samples from this area.

New Jersey Early Producer

New Jersey was the first state outside of New England to manufacture iron. The first furnace was built about 1674 in Monmouth County by Henry Leonard, a prominent Massachusetts ironmaster. Northern New Jersey blast furnaces originally operated on bog ores, but the industry developed rapidly with the use of the rich magnetite ores of the area. Foremost mines in colonial days were in the Succasunna and Ringwood deposits In Eastern Pennsylvania there were many furnaces operating on local timber and pockets of ore. One of the old iron plantations, called Hopewell, in Berks County has been purchased by the government and partially reconstructed by the National Park Service. At present steelmaking plants are located at Bethlehem, Coatsville, Harrisburg, Ivy Rock, Philadelphia, Phoenixville, Reading and Steelton in Eastern Pennsylvania; at Roebling, New Jersey, and Claymont, Delaware.

Columbian Sources

Relatively important producers of columbium, as now known, are the Belgian Congo and Brazil. In 1946, it was reported that rich columbium deposits had been found in the Ural Mountains of the Soviet Union The southern part of Manchuria, from which Chinese Communists have been moving in on the Korean struggle, was said, in 1947, to contain uranium and other ores, mixed with columbium. Within recent weeks, Norway has announced plans for working new-found columbium-holding deposits.

Cordage and Twine

A total of 388,334,000 pounds of cordage and twine was produced during 1950, according to a recent study of the cordage and twine market. The market in 1950 consumed more than 157,000 bales of cotton as compared with 152,000 bales in 1949. Of the 1950 total, 235,122,000 pounds were twine and 153,212,000 pounds cordage Twine used nearly 83,000 bales of cotton and cordage took over 74,000 bales.

New Theory of Earth's Origin Proposed at U. C.

A new theory to account for the creation of the earth has been offered by Dr. Wendell Latimer, professor of chemistry at the University of California, in a report in the technical journal, Science.

The theory is a composite of ideas suggested by geologists and astronomers, together with some theories on the chemistry of creation set forth by Dr. Latimer, who is an expert on thermodynamics, the science concerned with the mechanics of heat.

Dr. Latimer's suggestions begin with the assumption that the earth was formed by condensation of a cold cosmic cloud, which is in agreement with other modern ideas on cosmology. The scientist then proceeds to cite in detail the chemical reactions which reinforce this theory.

These particles fell together at varying speeds, the heavier, metal particles concentrating at the center, the lighter materials on outer layers. Heat from the radioactivity of potassium and other elements provided the energy for the chemical reactions within the earth which produced the atmosphere, water, and mountains and continents of the earth.

It appears that about half of the solid particle material in the universe has condensed into planets and stars, Dr. Latimer said. The remainder is in the great cosmic clouds which still exist in space, clouds from which new planets and stars are being created in the continuing evolution of the universe.

Northwestern Scientists Unravel Secrets of Sleep

Northwestern University scientists believe they have discovered the mysterious mechanism in man which puts him to sleep and wakes him up.

Dr. H. W Magoun of the medical school said today that changes from wakefulness to sleep seem to depend upon periodic variations in brain function now believed to originate in the brain stem.

The brain stem is about the size of a man's thumb and from four to five inches long. It extends from the top of the neck, where it connects to the spinal cord, up within the skull to the two cerebral hemispheres of the brain.

From a two-year study of normal and abnormal activity in this region, Dr. Magoun, a professor of anatomy, has come to the conclusion that the brain stem serves normally to keep the rest of the nervous system awake. He was associated in the study with Dr. D. B Lindsley, professor of psychology, and Dr. Guiseppe Moruzzi, visiting professor from the University of Pisa, Italy.

The professor reports that by direct stimulation of the brain stem of sleeping animals it is possible to produce all the features of wakefulness. Destruction of the brain stem. on the othe hand, leaves animals in a state of pathological sleep.

Bovine Ketosis

The grass-eating cow may lose her rating as the barnyard's Number One vegetarian—but it's all for her own good. A new veterinary medical bulletin reports that practicing veterinarians apparently have been successful in preventing or hastening recovery of many cases of bovine ketosis by adding animal protein to cows' rations. Ketosis is a complex form of poisoning. It is not related to any poisonous factor in the feed, but to toxic substances produced in the cow's own body. The animal protein treatment will be put to critical tests so that its value can be judged more fully.

Heaviest Freight Shipments

The Santa Fe Railroad, in October, 1944, used three flatcars to move a 500,000-pound fractionating tower from Tulsa, Oklahoma, to a Borger, Texas, plant manufacturing butadiene for synthetic rubber. The load was nearly 150 feet long and was the heaviest ever shipped in a single piece on any railroad. The next record shipment was a 488,200-pound steel oil refinery fractionating column, or "bubble" tower, shipped on two flatcars over the Frisco and Kansas City Southern railroads from St. Louis, Missouri, to Smiths Bluff, Texas, in June, 1938. In December, 1946, the Pennsylvania, Erie and Nickel Plate railroads transported on a single car a 487,000-pound steel machinery casting from New Castle, Pennsylvania, to Cleveland.

Fire Destruction Increases

U. S. fire losses are climbing again. The moderate decrease in fire destruction which occurred in 1949 has not been sustained during the first six months of 1950. Fire losses during June, 1950, were the greatest for that month during the 22 years for which detailed records are available. The $57,116,000 total for June brought the six months total to $367,117,000, an increase of 5.2 per cent over the fire destruction during the same period of 1949. During every month except February, 1950, the estimated fire loss was higher than for the same months of 1949.

RURAL LIVING

Writer Tells His City Friends Why He Likes It in the Country

(Editor's Note: The following article, "I Live in the Country" by Alan Devoe, was published in the September issue of Coronet magazine. It is reprinted here with the permission of that magazine.)

By ALAN DEVOE

IT IS QUITE CLEAR that most of my city friends feel sorry for me. The reason is that I live in the country. While they pity, they also wonder, and this reveals itself in certain perpetual questions.

What on earth do I find to do in the country? What is there to see? How do I fill my time?

They feel sorry for me because I have no radio or television, and because 11 miles separate me from the post office. They speak with sympathy of how very "dull" my life must be, and marvel that I am content to "stagnate" here.

I receive these commiserations with scorn. For I extract from this life of "isolation," as my friends term it, a deep and endless delight.

The house in which I live is very ancient and somewhat askew; but from this ancientness and crookedness I derive continuous solace. Here in this tiny dining room the china dogs on top of the old pine corner-cupboard have watched three generations at their feeding; in the great spool-bed upstairs have occurred both births and deaths.

There clings in these low-ceilinged rooms — with their faded flowered wallpaper, their horsehair sofas, and wideboarded uneven floors—an aura of the stalwart tranquillity, the hard-tolling patience, of that succession of homely Dutchmen who were our predecessors. Near the middle of the last century, one of these Hollenbecks (for such was the name of the sturdy family which tenanted this homestead) deserted the plow for a life of seafaring. When he was an old man, and had voyaged to every quarter of the globe, he came back to this house to eke out a living by mending stone walls.

So much for the house. It is like that tattered sampler in the hayloft of our barn which reads, "Sweet Rest in Heaven," and like the crooked path that untold thousands of footsteps have worn through the clover field to our well—a link with the simple, earthly lives of those good souls who are vanished.

In every direction, as I look from my windows, are the green wooded hills, untenanted by living man. They lie—these carved and molded masses of rugged earth—brooding in an ageless silence, baking their hummocked backs in the hot summer sun, shouldering the cold white weight of countless snows, existing eternal while the oaks and firs upon their slopes wither and die, and are born and live again through the passage of seasons.

My friends who speak of "loneliness" and "isolation" take no heed of the deep companionship of trees and rocks. Yet it is easy to discover, in lichen-covered boulders and in the cool smooth trunks of maples or the rough, fragrant trunks of firs, an essence of being with which it is very easy for a man to commune.

These high hemlocks are my fellows upon earth; together we face the elements, together struggle for sustenance, together are set upon by plagues and pestilences, together will return, when we die, to the eternal embracing earth of this planet. And it is possible for me to walk upon the black leaf mold in which these hemlocks have their roots and to draw from that contact a profound tranquillity of spirit.

This relaxed contentment is a far better antidote for turmoil and vexation than my city friends can possibly receive in the diversions afforded them by the movies, the theater, the radio or television—of which they deplore my lack.

THIS COUNTRY life of mine, far from being barren of things to do and see, is crowded from daybreak until nightfall My personal routine of eating, working, sleeping, and performing chores is sufficiently simple. But the details of the lives that surround mine and demand my attention—the lives of chipmunks and phoebes and woodchucks and of the very buttercups that grow profusely in our pasture —are so vastly absorbing as to require all my hours. It is inconceivable that I could possibly be "bored," even if I had nothing more to occupy me than the contemplation of the meadow upon which I look out as I write this

In such a rural district as that in which I live, neurosis is impossible. That sickly "turning inward" which makes wretches of city victims has no opportunity to enter here. All man's thought and energy and time are taken here, as they were in the beginning, in a constant coping with the problems presented by the earth and the elements. And living thus in daily contemplation of the vast swing and surge of the eternal cosmic machinery, man's minor woes assume an utter insignificance.

THE FICTION CORNER

EPICUREAN ERROR

By Isabelle Snyder

LAURA FENTON viewed the rutted road dubiously. "Are you sure this is the road, Amy?"

"Oh yes—'third road on the left'—just as you wrote it in the notebook when Mrs. Edwards told us about it . . . a wonderful country home that serves divine food. Hurry, I'm starved. And it sounds so divine!"

3-Minute Fiction

Laura turned the carefully-cared-for coupe into the narrow road, guiding it cautiously up the steep grade.

Amy giggled like a girl. "It's a good thing it isn't much farther, Laura. I'm starved!"

Laura smiled gently at the exaggerated speech of her flighty friend who refused to grow old, gracefully or otherwise. "I believe the food will be worth the long drive off our main route. Mrs. Edwards is most discriminating."

"There's the place," announced Amy coughing from the thick dust. "Just look at all the cars in the yard—the food must be wonderful."

Laura turned the coupe into the crowded farm yard and carefully selected an ample parking spot.

Amy pouted, "The food may be perfect but we'll have to wait ages to get in—just look at all those others waiting!" She bounced from the car like a child and stood impatiently while Laura fastidiously changed driving gloves for fresh white ones before leaving the car primly.

"Goodness, Amy Bowen, straighten your hat," Laura scolded as they walked to the house. "It seems strange that they don't have a sign on the road or out front," she commented as they ascended the steps to the veranda where other people already waited.

"Oh, outside, please," answered Amy warmly. "It's much too nice a day to stay inside."

THEY were greeted by an unsmiling woman in black. "Would you care to come inside or will you wait here on the porch?"

"Oh, outside, please," answered Amy warmly. "It's much too nice a day to stay inside." She continued to chatter of the weather and the lovely view while they found chairs in the shade. Then she turned to the woman next her. "Isn't this a lovely place?" she asked enthusiastically.

Her enthusion apparently was not transmitted by her speech. In fact, Amy had the peculiar sensation that comes to one who has committed a grave social error.

The woman murmered something polite and turned away but Amy was not to be denied. "I'm Amy Bowen and this is my friend, Laura Fenton. We are school teachers from over in Ohio," she said.

The woman looked at them in a pugzzled way, acknowledged the introductions briefly and changed her place.

"Well, really!" Amy said in disgust before turning to Laura to say in a whisper, "Where do you suppose they feed folks, Laura? I don't smell any food nor hear any dishes."

Laura answered quietly, "Don't fret so, Amy. There are so many flowers around that you couldn't smell food."

Amy squirmed around in her chair, peering curiously into the house. "Goodness," she said, "the place is banked with flowers." "Oh," she gasped, turning an odd greenish white. "Laura, I'm going to be sick," she cried.

Laura moved quickly, grasping the smaller woman by the arm to help her to the car. As they passed the open door, Laura glanced inside, then stifled a cry with a white-gloved hand. Reality had arrived with abrupt suddenness.

Not till the two women were safely in the car and ready to turn onto the paved highway did either speak. Amy wailed, "Oh, Laura, that horrible place! We'll never live this down."

Laura stopped the car and looked at the directions in the notebook. " 'Third road on right,' " she read. She turned to her stricken companion. "Amy Bowen," she said sternly, "maybe this will teach you to read the directions as they are written and to follow them carefully. The idea of taking us to a funeral instead of a restaurant!"

Star Dust
STAGE—SCREEN—RADIO

By INEZ GERHARD

BLONDE Marion Marshall has her best role so far in "That's My Boy," starring Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis, at Paramount, but she piled up an impressive list of credits at 20th Century-Fox before she left that studio. She was a model when 20th signed her, sent her to dramatic school for a year, then put her into "The Snake Pit"; after that came "Sitting Pretty," "Apartment for Peggy," "I Was a Male War Bride," for which she spent six months in Europe, and others. It was the test she made for "War Bride" that Hal Wallis saw; as soon as she began to free lance he signed her for her role in "That's My Boy."

Republicans Must Woo Dixiecrats to Win in 1952

By Wright A. Patterson

AS A MEANS of stealing the show from their opponents in the 1952 presidential campaign the Republicans should insert state rights as a major plank in their platform, so stated as to leave no possibility of its being misunderstood or misinterpreted.

To be effective it cannot be expressed in political weasel words, one of those "heads I win, tails you lose" kinds of statements that can be twisted to meet whatever occasion may present. It must be as explicit in its meaning as were those of Thomas Jefferson, the father and patron saint of the Democratic party, and the original states' righter.

Every piece of Fair Deal legislation the President has been able to force through congress has taken something away from the constitutional rights of the states, and something from the liberties of the people.

All of the Fair Deal legislation the President is so insistently demanding that congress enact is of the same anti-state rights character. Each bill, should it become the law of the land, would take away some rights that are now enjoyed by the states under the provisions of the constitution, some things on which the states now have the say-so.

At its convention, the Democratic party must either approve or condemn the actions of the Democratic administration. If it endorses such policies, it is approving a limitation of the constitutional rights of the states. That would be objectionable to the members of the party in the southern states.

With the Republicans proposing to protect the rights of the states it would give the Dixiecrats a place to which they could turn, and might result in the Republicans carrying some of the Southern states as did Herbert Hoover.

The Republicans have joined with the southern Dixiecrats in opposing the anti-states rights legislation the President has asked for, and the adoption of such a plank would be but an endorsement of the party's policies during the last two sessions of congress. The party, as such, must either endorse such actions, or apologize for them.

The opportunity the situation presents for a "squeeze play" would seem to have been made to order for the Republicans. Will they improve it, or will they "muff" it as not needed to win that 1952 political battle?

Undoubtedly a strong states' right plank in the Republican platform would insure some Democratic votes for Republican candidates in many states.

Thanks to the brilliant military mind of the late Admiral Sherman, at the time chief of naval operations, and to his ability in the field of diplomacy, despite the pettiness of England and France, fearful that Franco might fall heir to some of the funds that would otherwise go for their rearmament, we have added to the defense of Europe a practically impregnable battle line in the Pyrenees mountains and Spanish divisions to man them, for which Eisenhower will be thankful. It will prove of enormous value in the job to which he has been assigned.

There was certainly no reason why we should listen to the prejudiced protests of England and France. We are paying a large portion of the bill for their defense and providing a considerable portion of the armed manpower to defeat Stalin and his Communistic hordes.

England and France, being much nearer and more vulnerable, have much more to fear from the threatened Russian attack than have we, but those protests, based on the hates of many years standing, is an evidence of the impossibility of achieving the altruistic aims of the United Nations so long as those hates continue.

If England and France cannot rise above their petty prejudices, the United Nations might as well call off its efforts for world pacification. We are indebted to Admiral Sherman for ignoring those prejudices and adding to the defenses of Europe, for which we have assumed responsibility. It was a fine job, well done, and at an opportune time.

Into All the World

Lesson for September 30, 1951

SO YOU don't believe in missions? That's a position not easy to defend, if you make any show at all of being a Christian. Can you be a business man and not believe in customers? Can you be successful and not want to expand your business? "Missions" is a name given to the growing edge of Christianity, a name for its expanding program. It is a name that stands for everything we believe in as Christians. It stands for the proposition that Christ is the answer to all the world's needs, not yours and mine alone. Christ died for the world, not for the western hemisphere or the democracies alone.

Dr. Foreman

Greatest Missionary Religion

THERE ARE religions you cannot "crash," no matter what you do, unless you are born in them. For example, either you were born the child of a Parsee, or you can't ever be a Parsee.

Again, there are religions which you can join if you insist, but nobody is going to try to talk you into it. Take it or leave it. Hinduism is one such religion.

But there are three missionary religions, religions that set out to claim all the world for their territory; besides Christianity these are Buddhism and Mohammedanism.

Buddhism is 600 years older than Christianity, Mohammedanism some 600 years younger; but neither has spread into so many corners of the world as our religion has; neither has won anything like Christianity's number of converts.

Pessimists Are Always With Us

IF THE first Christians had not believed in missions, where would we be? Where were your ancestors when Christ was living on earth? If you are descended from any of the nations of Europe north of the Alps mountains, or from Africa, then at the time of Christ your ancestors were a barbarous lot. Using paint about as much as clothing, their favorite sports getting drunk and savage fighting, they had contributed nothing whatever to civilization.

Or, if you are descended from the peoples of western Asia or around the Mediterranean, then at the time of Christ they were civilized, but time was running out. The Roman Empire, which looked as if it might endure forever, was doomed, even though its final death-knell was still 300 years away. But decay had set in.

If you had been a church member in Antioch when Paul was the foreign missionary pastor sent out by that congregation, you could have thought of all sorts of good excuses for not supporting him or his work.

"Why bother with those heathen?" you might have said. "As for the nations around the Mediterranean, they are on the way out. Even if they take to Christianity, it will be only a shot in the arm. It won't save them from the crash.

As for those savages up north and out west (you would mean, in the countries now known as France and Spain), what have they ever amounted to? They haven't asked for missionaries; they will probably kill them if we send them. Sending missionaries or spending church money on those people is just throwing it down a rat-hole."

Missionaries Once Came To Your Home Town

LOOK over the churches in your home state, whatever it is. You will find, on investigation, that most of them, however large and prosperous they are now, were once "home mission" churches, set on their feet through the generosity of older Christian communities.

Without missions the Christian church would never have lived; if it ceases to believe in missions it can still die.

The secret? There is nothing mysterious about it. Read what Paul said and see how simple it all is, at heart. The preaching of the good news of God; the enthusiasm and heroism and determination of the missionary; the inspired ambition to do something for God that was never done before; the two-way contributions, of older churches to new and new ones to old; and the circle of prayer uniting Christians everywhere, old and new. That is what made missions work then; it is what keeps missions going on now.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Surprise Answer

WHEN we married, Alfred and I moved to a town some miles away from home," writes Mildred King, from Troy. "We bought a somewhat larger house than we needed, because it was all we could get, and to carry rather heavy payments, I got a job with the idea it was temporary. It began as waitress in a hotel, but it paid well, and to my surprise I liked the work.

"We had been married a year when my school chum, Linda, came to town, and got a job with me. We had plenty of room for her, and as I was then expecting a baby it seemed a very normal arrangement for her to board with us and help me with the care of the house. After Jehane was born I thought I would not go back to work, but Linda had lost her job because it involved more standing than was good for her back, and so she stayed home and I accepted my old position, only with changed hours and better pay. I did not have to leave home until three o'clock daily, except Wednesday, when I had a free day, but my hours were those of the big dining room, five to ten o'clock, and quite often later.

Works Like A Charm

"Linda adores Jehane and manages her better than I do; Al is a good cook and likes to do the marketing on the way home and help her with dinner. You can see how this leaves me out. By the time I get home everything is quiet; Jehane, who sleeps in Linda's room, long asleep, Linda usually asleep, and Al reading in bed waiting for me. It all seems to work like a charm, we almost own the house now, and have added luxuries like a washer, dryer, television and so on. But what good does that do me?

"... no trouble of the triangle ..."

"On Sundays sometimes we picnic with the baby, Al leaving me at the hotel at three. If I were sure in my mind how I feel about all this, I wouldn't be writing you," Mildred's letter goes on. "We are accustomed now to the double income; mine as good as Al's. It means clothes, extras, it means my independence. Linda might take her turn at working now on some job, but she hates the idea, and the little she could pay wouldn't compensate for my being idle.

"The one thing I haven't asked you," this letter concludes, "is this: Is Al in love with Linda, and is she in love with him? That's what I don't know. Linda is not pretty, she is tall, lean, she has a sort of funny whine in her voice and is always making fun of herself. I am dark, small, was always considered good-looking, and have a good figure.

"Al has never given me any sign of not loving me, and someday he promises me what I want; a country home, and a chance to have more children. There is no trouble of the triangle sort; I know I am lucky to have this housekeeper at a mere $50 a month, which is all she wants. Linda is happy, and Al often says he is a fortunate man. But is this arrangement safe, and what would be the eventual outcome if I let things go on this way for awhile?"

"Yes!"

In answer to Mildred I am going to say something that may surprise her. I am saying "yes," to the last question in her letter.

Yes. I'd let things go on this way for awhile, Mildred. I know that many of your women friends, and perhaps your mother, if she were living, might say, "Get rid of that woman! Don't have her in your house another minute! She is a snake in the grass."

But think what that would mean. Breaking up a friendship that all three of you value. Making all three of you uncomfortable. Hurting Al, and perhaps awakening in his heart a loyalty for Linda. Even if he doesn't love her, even if he's one of those men who love domestic peace and good meals and his well-run home and his child and his handsome capable wife, and isn't too analytical, he might easily resent your being "mean" to Linda.

Then there's three-year-old Jehane, who is being so well cared for, and there, finally, are you. You'd have to take up housekeeping and baby care on a half-income, or try to find that nonexisfent ideal housekeeper who will work for quarter pay.

As a matter of fact you've got that housekeeper now, and you all, counting the baby, find her capability itself. So you keep yourself charming, good-natured, affectionate, and try to spend that free Wednesday night exclusively with Al.

Ray Has Job in Beating Turpin

By GRANTLAND RICE

AROUND ten years ago—possibly more than ten—I was introduced to a slender young fellow at a fight camp in the hills. I had never seen him before, nor heard his name—Ray Robinson.

Now the same Ray Robinson is facing the crucial test of a famous championship career. This means the test of survival—or being washed under by the surf of time.

Robinson, ex-middleweight champion, is meeting the man who beat him so decisively in England a few weeks ago.

Grantland Rice

Randy Turpin, the English fighter, was practically unknown in this country before the Robinson fight. He was just another British punk facing the best living fighter, pound for pound. This was Sugar Ray Robinson's rating — the best in the business. But Turpin, the unknown, whipped him decisively.

But who whipped Robinson? Was it Turpin? Was it the six weeks in Paris and Germany? Was it the holiday jaunt? Or was it the inroad of ten years, so terrifically important in competitive sport? Important in the matter of reflexes, speed, timing and even power. Also stamina.

There are many, many things that make up competitive qualities needed to win.

At a fight gathering a night or two back, there was a big division of opinion as to whether Robinson was below par or Turpin was the better fighter.

Ray Arcel, one of the best conditioners in the trade, had another slant. Ray figures that Robinson was below his best and also that Turpin was a much better fighter than he had been rated.

"When a fighter is a little off," Ray says, "and then meets a much better man than he was expecting to meet, the result is pretty sure to be a shock. Robinson will be a better fighter when he meets Turpin the second time. But that doesn't mean that Robinson is sure to win as the pictures show that the Englishman can both box and punch. Also that he can take a punch."

The Age Margin

Ray Robinson is no old, worn-out fighter. But, after all, he has been around some ten years. He won the welterweight championship in 1946 and picked up the middleweight title Feb. 14, 1951.

In his training he doesn't show you that he has slipped, but it could be different against a first-class opponent. Turpin is only 23. You may not have too much experience at 23, but you should be equipped with speed, reflexes and stamina.

When you watch Turpin at work you get the immediate idea that he could be an extremely rough young man on any occasion.

The average fight fan doesn't quite understand how much wear and tear a popular fighter suffers in the course of years. Joe Louis took good care of himself, but he was suddenly old. He could see an opening as quickly as he used to see one, but the split second punch was gone.

Robinson at least has the advantage this time of knowing the size of the job he faces. He wasn't expecting too much in England. Today he knows it will take one of his best performances to win.

There can be no alibi of any sort in a second defeat. Not that Robinson has offered one for Turpin's victory. But he knows this time it must be an all-out effort.

Wide-Open Tennis Scramble

When you take the ranking tennis players from ten nations you are bound to have something of an omelet.

In addition to the powerful Australian unit, featuring Frank Sedgman, Kenneth McGregor and Mervin Rose, the U.S. has more high-grade challengers than the country has known in a long time.

The U. S. list includes Arthur Larsen, defending champion, Herb Flam, Dick Savitt, Tony Trabert, Budge Patty, Hamilton Richardson, Victor Seixas and Gardnar Mulloy, to mention only a few. And for a change the bulk of power doesn't belong entirely to California.

Hogan's Place in Golf

There is a rolling chorus of queries you hear wherever golfers meet. It is along these lines: "What is Ben Hogan's place or ranking in connection with such golfers as Bobby Jones, Harry Vardon, Walter Hagen and Gene Sarazen?" There are others, of course, but these four are enough.

In the first place, the major record performances belong to Jones and Hogan. Jones scored 13 national and international victories.

To Hogan for his miraculous comeback in 1950, when he carried his wrecked body to the U.S Open and to his amazing triumphs in the U.S. Open, the Masters and the Tam O'Shanter "world" championships this campaign.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to

REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Visiting around Iowa

by Joe Marsh

Iowa's Rock Man

Back in 1868 a trickster had a block of Fort Dodge gypsum carved into a 10 foot statue.

He buried it near Cardiff, N. Y., then dug it up and announced he'd discovered a petrified man.

He made big money, charging admission to see it. Finally, however, folks began to doubt, and the "discoverer" confessed.

Ten foot giants didn't live then, and don't now. Tallest in our town is our lawyer, 6-8. Shortest is our druggist, 5-6. Both take some kidding when they're seen together. But that doesn't faze 'em.

It doesn't make any difference how tall or short a man is, or what color his hair or skin. It's the man, himself, that counts.

The lawyer's a Republican, the druggist a Democrat. The lawyer enjoys his temperate glass of beer, the druggist his coffee. They're both fine men, good neighbors, good citizens.

It takes all kinds of folks to make a good town, and the wider their tastes and ideas, the better a town it is.

He was married to Vina Hansen and to this union one daughter, Marjorie was born. His wife died a few years ago. NEXT WEEK, OCT 7 TO 13, IS FIRE PREVENTION WEEK.-Your Iowa Safetly Congress urges you to join in the national observance. Learn and practice fire safety rules, inspect your home for fire hazards and teach your children the importance of fire precaution.

The tragic loss of human life and property in fires in Iowa is pushed upward every year. Last year's Iowa fire loss reached a new all-time death loss of 158 and more than 9 million dollars damage

Fire safety authorities point out that the biggest single cause of fire is "people". The only natural causes of fire are lightning and tornadoes It is people's carelessness and unwillingness to take fire precautions -- even with everyday items like matches and cigarettes and electrical appliances -- that cause destructive blazes.

Three out of four fires are started by these common causes: (1) Matches and smoking, (2) misuse of electricity, and (3) heating plant defects

Inspect your home -- see that there are plenty of ash trays, check for frayed wires and overloaded circuits, and have your furnace looked over before cold weather sets in.

Make every week Fire Prevention Week in your home. Remember: Protect your home and family -- Prevent Fires!

"FRIENDS OF SCOUTING" CAMPAIGN PLANNED

Plans for the "Friends of Scouting" Campaign Kick-Off, October 23rd are shaping up rapidly Fred Missal, Garner, Campaign chairman for Hancock County announced today He reported that the Boy Scout Finance Campaign will be state wide this year, and that the Winnebago Council is cooperating in this effort. Governor William S. Beardsley is State Chairman and Sam Torgeson of Lake Mills is directing the project in the Winnebago Council.

Sixty-five communities in the nine counties of the council have organized to participate in the campaign. The funds raised in each council will be used exclusively to meet that council's budget. The state organization serves only to coordinate the efforts of nine Iowa councils, to aid in saving campaign expenses, and to provide a united publicity and educational program.

The Winnebago Council needs not less than $38,000 to operate next year.

The council budget was determined by 80 men representing nearly every community of the Winnebago Council and representing labor, business, professions, farm service clubs, veterans groups, and other groups. The funds are needed to maintain the Scouting program, provide opportunities for more boys to become Scouts, provide camping, training opportunities and the services needed to conduct the hundreds of Scouting activities.

The campaign has the enthusiastic support and endorsement of scores of state organizations, and many have released statements urging the public to support the effort generously.

The Campaign will kick-off with radio programs carried by many Iowa radio stations. Breakfasts will be held in each community and the workers will listen in to the broadcasts.

Mr. Sam Torgeson, Lake Mills, Council Finance Chairman, reported that this is the first time in the history of Scouting that so many councils have joined together for one united effort to raise the funds. The project is drawing nation-wide attention.

Community organization and all plans for the kick-off will be completed by October 10th.

Community Chairman for Hancock County are: L. L. Marchart, Britt; W. C. Harvey, Britt, Co-chairman; Dr R. A. Phillips, Corwith; Rev. W. S. Handy, Corwith, Co-chairman; R. E. Reasoner, Crystal Lake; D. S. Cottinghon, Crystal Lake, Co-chairman; A. E. Rasmussen, Garner; Henry Johnson, Kanawha; Dr. A. H. Dulmes, Klemme; and Henry Bode, Woden.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

Painting Over Shingle Stain

QUESTION: The upper half of our house is brown stained shingles. We want to paint them white. How can we do it? Is there any way we can prevent the stain from "bleeding thru?"

ANSWER: If the stain is very old and weathered it may be safe to apply a first coat of aluminum paint and then put on the house paint. But if the stain is fairly recent, it would be well to apply a stain-seal to prevent any possible bleeding through. Consult your paint dealer, and buy top quality products.

REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Crime in America

By ESTES KEFAUVER
United States Senator

Three of a Series

Chicago: The Heritage of Al Capone

If the Senate Crime Committee had gone no further than Chicago in its quest, it could have written a complete report-in-miniature on the picture of nationwide criminal and political corruption. For practically every example of rottenness found anywhere in the United States was duplicated in the capital of the Capone mob.

Chicago remains the jungle of criminals who walk in the footsteps of Al Capone. Virgil Peterson, operating director of the Chicago crime commission and former FBI agent, traced the history of the Chicago mob from the days of Big Jim Colosimo, who "had risen to power and influence through the operation of a string of brothels." On May 11, 1920, Big Jim was bumped off. Peterson noted that there always had been suspicion that the bodyguard imported by Colosimo from New York, Johnny Torrio, had engineered the killing. Torrio succeeded Colosimo as Chicago's underworld lord.

He, in turn, imported as his bodyguard a cold-blooded little killer from New York's Five Point Gang, a then obscure, scarfaced hoodlum of 23 named Al Capone. For four years, Torrio enjoyed a bloody reign in Chicago, waxing high on the profits of prostitution, gambling, beer and booze. But after Torrio was the victim of an ambush which almost cost his life, he lost his nerve and abdicated in favor of Capone.

With Greasy Thumb Guzik as his paymaster and business adviser, and such stalwarts as Frank Nitti, Paul (The Waiter) Ricca, Louis (Little New York) Campagna and the Fischetti brothers as his lieutenants, Capone was able to rule effectively. The infamous St. Valentine's day massacre of Feb. 14, 1929, was an example of how Capone dealt with opposition. In 1931, however, Capone was cut down by Uncle Sam on an income-tax evasion charge and was sent to prison. Frank Nitti succeeded him, but in 1943, facing prosecution on an extortion charge, Nitti was found dead under circumstances that indicated he had committed suicide. Since then, the mob—known to this day as the Capone syndicate—has been run pretty much by a "corporation," in which Guzik, Ricca and Accardo wield great influence.

A wave of suspensions and resignations by higher-ups in the police department followed our investigation of great wealth accumulated by a number of Chicago police captains.

The most highly publicized case was that of Capt. Daniel A. Gilbert, referred to by Chicago newspapers as "the richest cop in the world." Gilbert was serving as chief investigator for the state attorney's office of Cook county, and also was the Democratic candidate for sheriff.

I remarked to him, "People don't understand how you get hold of all that money." Whereupon, the captain began explaining to us all the details of his badge-to-riches story. There was a little "honest gambling" on the side, but mostly it was done through investments in stocks and bonds.

"I bet on the football games and I bet on prize fights," Captain Gilbert said, "but mostly it would all be elections." I asked him:

Q. "You just like to bet?"

A. "I have been a gambler at heart."

It was about two weeks after this that the voters of Cook county registered their disapproval of Captain Gilbert by defeating him at the polls.

In Chicago, too, we gathered evidence of a disturbing phenomenon that we found repeated in other large cities: the active participation in gang affairs by a certain element of lawyers, accountants and tax consultants.

One fascinating story into which the committee delved was the net of strange circumstances surrounding the parole from the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth of three Capone syndicate gangsters, Paul Ricca, Louis Campagna, and Charles (Cherry Nose) Gioe, alias Joye.

The three, along with a pack of other Chicago, New York and West coast mobsters, were sent to the penitentiary in 1943 to serve 10-year sentence on conviction of conspiracy to extort huge sums from the movie industry by threatening to call a strike of a gangster-controlled union. After Ricca, Campagna and Gioe had served only about one-third of their sentences, efforts to secure their paroles were successful.

However, Ricca and Campagna also were in trouble with the federal government on charges of income tax evasion. The claims had to be settled before the gangsters could be paroled. At this point, the mob stepped in, and there ensued events as strange as a dime novel.

The attorney called in to settle the tax case was Eugene Bernstein. Many years ago, Bernstein had been with the Internal Revenue Bureau. When he obtained his law license and left the bureau, he specialized in tax cases. He accumulated a list of clients that read like the blue book of the Capone syndicate.

With information obtained with Tony Accardo's help, he was able to effect a settlement with the government. Campagna's case was settled for $90,371.49; Ricca's, for $36,146.50, and accumulated interest brought the total settlement for the two cases to approximately $190,000. This was approximately $322,000 less than the original deficiency claims. Anyway, the next question was how to raise the money. Bernstein went back to the penitentiary to talk with his clients about it. "They both took the position they didn't owe the money and wouldn't pay it."

Bernstein returned to Chicago. Almost immediately, he said, strangers started walking into his office and leaving packages of bills, usually wrapped in paper, in amounts varying between $10,000 and $20,000. When the first batch of bills came in, Bernstein told us (in what seemed to be a masterpiece of understatement) he was "taken aback." The procession of strange men bearing currency continued until the needed total of $190,000 had been brought in.

Q. "Did you ask their names?"

A. "I wouldn't think of asking their names, because it made no difference to me . . ."

When all was settled, Bernstein went to Leavenworth again to see the boys out of the penitentiary. At the Kansas City airport, Tony Gizzo, the mobster and alleged Mafia chieftain, met them and drove them to the penitentiary. Gizzo also arranged for airplane tickets and hotel suites, as needed, for the Chicago contingent.

We ran up against a stone wall when we sought to learn from Ricca and Campagna—and later from Tony Accardo—who might have put up the $190,000. "Why I would be glad to find out who did that for me," the white-haired, 52-year-old Ricca innocently told us.

Today Ricca is a man of considerable substance. He told us he owns a home at River Forest, Ill., an elaborate summer house at Long Beach, Ind., and an 1100 acre farm in Kendall County, Ill. which he said cost him approximately $230,000. These assets—plus certain stock holdings and the $300,000 cash Ricca said he had on hand when he went to the penitentiary—made the committee look with askance on the story we dug up about how Ricca, after his parole, borrowed $80,000 from one Hugo Bennett, formerly Benvenuti, a $22,500-a-year auditor for the Miami Beach Kennel club and the National Jockey club at Sportsman's park at Cicero, a Chicago suburb.

The situation regarding the Chicago and Miami horse and dog tracks is involved. The president of both the National Jockey club and the Miami Beach Kennel club is William H. Johnston who, in 1948, arranged for a $100,000 contribution to Fuller Warren's Florida gubernatorial campaign.

Johnston sparred at great length with Counsel Rudolph Halley as to whether any of his tracks had links with the Capone gang, but Peterson stated in his testimony: "During the heyday of Al Capone, the Capone syndicate was in control of dog tracks in virtually every part of the country including Florida."

Anyway, when Ricca, the Capone syndicate gangster, came out of the penitentiary and wanted $80,000 for the purpose, he said, of making improvements on his farm, he turned to his old friend Bennett, the auditor at the track where Ricca, with other Caponeites, had gambled. Bennett obligingly let him have the $80,000 in two installments of $40,000 each.

JUST ONE BIG CHANCE

'Gamblers' Friend' Candidate for Mayor

COVINGTON, Ky.—One of the latest candidates to announce for Mayor of this Northern Kentucky city is Howard "Honest" Marshall, a painter who is described as the "gambler's friend" on one of his campaign posters:

On the subject of gambling, Marshall said in his platform that everything is a gamble, including "picking the right church where you will be forever blessed or eternally damned."

He added: "There is a small clique . . . that is trying to use the ironbound fist of legality to force reform and make citizens live their doctrine."

The city of Covington and county of Kenton have figured nationally in investigations of organized gambling.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Beans

Fresh green snap beans can be served alone as a hot vegetable, or in combination with carrots, celery and onions, fried apple slices, sweet red peppers, or even pieces of crisply-fried bacon.

* * *

Beet Salad

To use beets successfully in a raw salad, add the beets just before serving—then their color does not mix with the color of the other vegetables.

* * *

Saving the Flavor

Fifteen to twenty-five minutes is usually enough cooking time for fresh green snap beans, because longer cooking usually destroys both flavor and food value.

Lemons

Lemons are quite valuable household aids. A few drops of lemon juice will bleach some stains, make sour milk out of sweet, and prevent cut bananas apples and avocados from darkening. After peeling onions, you can easily remove the stain on your hands by rubbing them with a piece of lemon.

* * *

Gravy Too Salty?

After you have made a meat gravy and you realize it is too salty, drop a piece of raw potato in it for a few minutes before serving.

* * *

Washing Linoleum

In washing your linoleum use soap and warm water sparingly. If any water gets under the linoleum, it will tend to rot the linoleum.

Safety First

If you keep your knives, can openers and other sharp kitchenware in the same drawer, you may discover that it can be dangerous. Partitions in the drawer or a knife rack will help to avoid accidents with sharp tools.

Right Vase

Choosing the right vase for the right bouquet doesn't have to be difficult. Just keep in mind the part the container plays—it should never detract from the flowers.

JUST KIDDING

Play on Words

In a certain court case one of the lawyers caused much amusement by referring to opposing counsel as "Mr.—er—shall we say Necessity."

This went on for some time until the judge interrupted.

"Might I ask, Mr. Robinson," he said, "why you continually refer to learned counsel as 'Mr. Necessity'?"

"Because he knows no law," was the biting answer.

No Argument

After a young lawyer had talked nearly five hours to a jury, who felt like lynching him, his opponent, a grizzled old veteran, arose, looked sweetly at the judge, and said:

"Your honor, I will follow the example of my young friend who has just finished, and submit the case without argument."

Error

An Irish lawyer once addressed the court as "gentlemen," instead of "your honors." After he had concluded, a brother of the bar reminded him of his error. He immediately arose to apologize thus:

"May it please the court, in the heat of debate I called yer honors gentlemen. I made a mistake ver honors."

There will be a lot of good corn to pick. There will not be enough Oliver Corn Pickers. There will not be enough picker repairs. Because of the heavy husk and leaves there will be more breakage than last year and the year before. Be careful. The hands and fingers you save WILL be your own.

Those who had perfect scores were: Donald Anderson, Roxanne Back Candace Carlson, Sherryle Clabaugh, Maurine Johnson, and Jo Anne Jacobs.

We have finished four weeks of Health Inspection. Roxanne Back, Sherryle Clabaugh and Maurine Johnson received cards showing that they had a perfect score during that time. They had to remember to brush their teeth, wash their face and hands, have clean nails and handkerchief, hair combed and shoes shined every day.

Maurine Johnson returned her dental card signed this week.

(Winner of the 1951 Iowa ACS bronze medal for his outstanding contributions to cancer control.)

Is Cancer Hereditary?

In certain laboratory animals, which occasionally develop a spontaneous cancer of a particular organ, it has been possible by selective breeding to produce a strain in which that type of cancer will almost invariably appear, provided the animal survives to the proper age. By contrast, other strains have been developed in which that type of cancer practically never develops.

In humans, the evidence for the heredity transmission of the tendency to develop cancer is less well marked although occasionally one sees a family in which more than the expected number of individuals will have cancer of a specific organ. Moreover, there are on record a few airs of identical twins who have developed cancers at the same age.

It would seem then that there may be an hereditary tendency to malignant growths in some families, but that the other factors, irritation and age, must be operative to produce a cancer. The mode of inheritance of this tendency is obscure and probably extremely complex.

The presence of canceh in one or both parents should merely make an individuali more than usually alert in watching for, and heeding, the usual danger signals.

For answers to cancer questions write American Cancer Society, Mason City, Iowa.

These plaintiffs further pray in their petition that a decree be entered by the Court, establishing title to the above described real property in each of them as above set forth, against the adverse claims of the defendants and each and all of them, and all unknown claimants and all persons unknown having or claiming any right, title or interest in or to said premises, and that all persons claiming by, through or under them and all persons claiming by descent, devise, dower, conveyance, mortgage, deed of trust, assignment or succession, or any other method, be forever barred and estopped from ever having, asserting or claiming any right, title or interest in or to the said premises or any part thereof, adverse to the plaintiffs or the plaintiffs' title therein, and that the plaintiffs' title to their respective premises above described be quieted, established and confirmed The plaintiffs in their petition further pray for such other and further equitable relief as to the Court may seem just and proper

MAJOR ECONOMIC EVENT

Installment Buying Was Started 40 Years Ago in Auto Industry

Although there has been no fanfare to mark it, 1951 is the fortieth anniversary of a major economic event—one that has been of especial importance to people who live in small towns. For it was in 1911 that the first automobiles were sold on installments and the greatest period of industrial and social development in history began.

The time payment system we take for granted has brought an "orderly revolution" in our whole way of life. Because it has been a major factor in the development of American industrial capacity, it has had a great influence on world events. It would be a much different and probably much worse world to live in if American merchandising genius had not invented the system of letting people buy cars out of income.

In the 15 years between 1895, when car production really started, and the end of 1910, a total of only 521,000 cars were made. The average model cost three years' pay of the average skilled worker. Many people said the industry had about reached its peak. There weren't many more families who could afford a car!

Since then, there have been about 93,000,000 cars produced in this country. There are nearly 40,000,000 in use today by the nation's 42,800,000 family units.

What happened is, pointed out by the American Finance Conference, the association of independent sales credit companies, in a report on the effects of 40 years of installment selling. Enabling people to buy cars out of income, like homes or insurance, immediately broadened the market. This made possible mass production and sharp reductions in cost, which in turn brought cars within reach of more people. This stimulated employment and our whole economy. People could buy more and more goods, and with the installment system spreading to other lines of merchandise, modern, efficient goods went into millions of modest homes.

Putting the nation on wheels has changed our cities from dark and dirty areas around our factories to industrial centers surrounded by clean, light residential suburbs. Factories are now being built in outlying areas, where space is not prohibitively costly, and are spread out and pleasant. Recreation has been revolutionized—people go far away on vacations, take week-ends in the country, play golf, make the whole area for miles around a playground. Farmer and city dweller enjoy the same recreation, cultural facilities and shopping centers.

THE INFLUENCE on the whole economy of bringing the car within reach of nearly everyone is shown by these figures: the nearly 6,000,000 cars produced in 1950 used up the agricultural products of nearly 3,000,000 acres This includes about 410,000,000 pounds of cotton, 3,000,000 bushels of corn, 14,250,000 gallons of molasses, 190,000,000 pounds of wool, 12,000,000 pounds of turpentine and large quantities of other farm products. About 80 per cent of U. S. rubber consumption goes into automotive uses, as well as 75 per cent of all plate glass, 68 per cent of all leather upholstery, 55 per cent of alloy steel and 51 per cent of malleable iron.

Much of the technological and chemical progress of the past 40 years has been stimulated by the urge of the auto makers to find better ways of making cars, so the public would buy more of them—on installments. One of every seven employed persons in the United States owes his job to the automobile.

The industrial plant that won World War II and is now our greatest check on Russian aggression was developed to meet the public's demand for goods it bought on time payments.

These are some of the reasons Dr. A. Anton Friedrich, noted economist of New York University, has called the mass installment credit system along with the mass production methods it stimulated "the two pillars of American prosperity." And they are the reasons Isaac F. Marcosson, former president of Studebaker Corporation, said:

"Installment buying now emerges as the builder of America's standard of living. It is a revolution which has lifted the average man to the level of living once reserved for the few. It is one of the greatest economic forward steps that has been devised in modern times."

In only 40 years, the installment system has become the mainspring of the American economy. Anything that tampers with it threatens to bring the wheels of American economy and society to a halt. Meeting the public's needs as they see fit, it promises to help make the next 40 years even more progressive than the years have been since that first car was sold on installments.

THE FICTION CORNER

A BETTER MOUSETRAP

By John Bulling

I WAS ABOUT to doze off into an after dinner coma, when the ad first caught my eye. There was no fancy display about it. In fact, it was in the want ad columns and I only noticed it because it had been set in heavy type. It went somehow like this:

3-Minute Fiction

HERE IT IS AT LAST! ! ! BEAT A PATH TO OUR DOOR, FOLKS! 'KILLIT' IS GUARANTEED TO KILL RATS AN MICE. DOUBLE YOUR MONEY BACK IF YOU FAIL TO KILL RODENTS AFTER FOLLOWING THE SIMPLE INSTRUCTIONS!

There followed a name and address, and a request to send one dollar for a genuine 'Killit'. The thing was guaranteed. What could I lose?

I took the paper to the kitchen and showed the ad to Mary. She insisted that we didn't have any mice or rats, but I said maybe not, but it would be nice to have a guaranteed mousetrap anyhow. I wadded up a dollar bill and stuck it in an envelope and addressed it to the Killit people and made a special trip to the post office to mail it.

Later I got to thinking about it. I hoped that Killit would not be a cat—we already had one cat, and there just isn't room for another one in our two by four apartment. But then, they couldn't send you a cat by mail, could they?

I thought of a buddy of mine, Bill Stout. He was a chronic smoker—you know the type. The world is his ashtray. He had already started several expensive fires by laying down cigarettes and forgetting where he'd put them. He had seen an ad in the paper for an ashtray guaranteed to snuff forgotten cigarettes. Just the thing for him. He'd ordered the thing, and when it came in the mail he had found out why it had been guaranteed—it had to be filled with water. How we'd all laughed at Bill for being caught by slick advertising.

I showed the ad to Mary, but she insisted that we didn't have any mice or rats.

BUT how could a mousetrap be guaranteed to kill if it didn't do just that? No, I was safe enough from the hilarity of our crowd. If I bought a lemon and the story happened to leak out, I should never hear the end of it, particularly from Bill. I remember how mad he'd been when I laughed at him. But a mousetrap guaranteed to kill—there was no way of getting around it.

I tried to figure out what the thing would be like. Basically a mousetrap doesn't appear capable of much change. I mean to say, the thing we all know as a mousetrap is sound, and seems about the only way to go about catching mice short of running after them.

That same Sunday night I had dreams about mousetraps. I'm one of those guys who can always remember his dreams with crystal clarity. The mousetraps I had entertained in my subconscious during the night, while they had seemed pretty good at the time, were complete washouts in the harsh light of day. Most of them were Rube Goldberg affairs, and none of them would have worked.

I began to forget the beastly mousetrap though Mary didn't. Apparently a workable idea had come to her while she was down at the market, and she had held up the line at the cashier's counter by demanding a piece of paper and a pencil—neither of which she ever has with her—and sketching out a fairly detailed plan of the thing, deaf to the selfish barracking of the pushing assortment of waiting housewives. She brought it home, indignant at the attitude of the shopping public, and showed it to me. I said it would have been the best mousetrap to hit civilization yet, and where are you going to get the cyclatron to work it?

We weren't kept in suspense too much longer. A package came in on the mail on the Wednesday or Thursday of the same week. It was very heavy, and had cost twenty-four cents to mail. We ripped it open and out came a flat slab of wood about six inches square and a piece of lead pipe a foot long. And a sheet of printed instructions which started out: Place the mouse or rat to be killed on the wooden block and strike it smartly behind the ears with the pipe. . . .

Good Escape?

WHEN HER MARRIAGE runs into difficulties, what a welcome—what a miraculous escape—divorce seems to offer a woman!

Anything—anything to get away from circumstances that have become unendurable. Once free from Len, his wife thinks everything else will fall into place. The children—oh, they'll be all right! They won't hear any more quarreling, anyway. Money? Well, certainly if Patsy gets her divorce and the custody of the children, Len will have to pay a good fair alimony.

All this sounds like escape Escape into peace and quiet and change and novelty and freedom and a chance to live her own life. It sounds like the thing we all want.

A New Romance

And when a new love, a new romance adds itself to this—oh, there's no use arguing with any woman then! Her family? They don't matter. Her children? Why, they'll be better off! Money! She'll agree to anything, with Phil's big strong arm about her. And his child? That little girl of 4, whose mother has married again and gone off to live in Buenos Aires. What about her?

". . . a new love . . ."

Little Shirley? Why, she's a perfect darling, and she'll live with Phil and Patsy, and Patsy's little boy and girl, why not?

"We know we can't ever quarrel because we absolutely think alike about everything," said a woman of 34 to me, anticipating her third marriage. She went into it with a simple little problem that involved her temperamental, resentful 12-year-old boy, her first husband's claim on the boy, his mother's hostility, her second husband's claim on her younger boy, then aged 3, and the idol of her heart, her third husband's daughter of 16 by an earlier marriage, his brother's bitter antagonism and determination to get guardianship of the child, a dispute concerning some property settlements after the first marriage, and the fact that her autocratic and troublesome old father insisted on living with her, and had considerable property to leave either to her or to a home for superfluous old gents.

And into this bedlam this woman launched herself lightheartedly with the assurance that she and Peter never could quarrel because they thought alike about everything. This marriage lasted almost four years, at which time there was another child, a small delicate girl with a serious eye deficiency, to consider.

This morning I have on my desk a letter from a woman named Emmarie Schmidt. She and her first husband Dan reached the parting of the ways nine years ago; Emmarie immediately married Ward Schmidt, and took over Ward's adorable son, 3 years old. This boy, 12 now, is "a completely unmanageable little fiend," according to Emmarie.

Won't Allow Discipline

"No boarding school will keep him because Ward don't allow any discipline," she writes me. "Junior is disobedient, untruthful and he steals. Yes, he does. No money is safe in the house, and his school mates' parents are always telephoning me about cameras, knives, even bicycles. He sold another boy's bicycle for $13 last year; twice we have had the police here. Other children have been avoiding him for some years, he is morally delinquent, and whether he will ever be anything else is a question. I feel that I simply cannot face the long years before he leaves our custody. His mother has not seen him, except for an occasional luncheon or matinee, for years. She now has three other children; I have none.

"My husband is a splendid man, we have plenty of money and a fine life—except for this boy. Ward is devoted to him, argues, explains, pleads, gets him out of any and every predicament. He says that if Junior has enough money he won't need to steal, so Junior gets everything he asks for."

"Ward and I had a delightful engagement for this week end; instead, at the last moment, he has taken Junior and another boy on a fishing trip. He got them expensive equipment of rods, creels, tent, coats and all the rest of it. And this for a boy who has always resented our marriage and been a deliberate trouble maker!

"I have been in difficult circumstances before this, but I never have felt myself so helpless and futile. You would make a great impression on my husband if you could honestly advise him."

MIRROR Of Your MIND

Some Persons Natural Friends

By Lawrence Gould

Do some people "naturally make friends"?

Answer: Yes, and they do so by being "natural"—that is, free from fear and conflict. It is true that all of us are born with "selfish" instincts which, if given free rein, tend to alienate others. But we also have an instinctive desire to be loved which normally leads us to restrain our selfishness so as to enjoy our neighbors' good will and affection. If we do not do this, it is because we are afraid to trust them to be friendly, which in turn means that we felt we were "rejected" by our parents. If you're basically fearless, you'll make friends as naturally as you breathe.

Should you be glad your girl is a tomboy?

Answer: That depends on whether her interest in boyish activities like climbing trees is natural or "compulsive." There is no reason why a girl of ten or thereabouts should not enjoy the same things that a boy does and be permitted to do so without interference. But if she plays baseball, not because she likes it, but to show "she can do anything a boy can" and if she avoids the company of other girls in favor of that of boys, you have reason to be concerned. She may be developing a pattern of false masculinity that will hamper her becoming a true woman when she grows up.

Are VA mental hospitals progressing?

Answer: Yes, says Dr. Herbert C. Modlin, chief neuropsychiatrist at the famous Winter VA Hospital, Topeka, Kansas. Far from being the mainly custodial institution that so many mental hospitals have been in the past, the modern VA Hospital is concentrating on a postive mental health program which includes maintaining the health of recovered patients. This involves converting the neuropsychiatric hospital into a "general" one, providing first-rate medical and surgical care as well as social service and vocational rehabilitation. The new type of hospital is also a center of psychiatric research.

Shock Therapy in Outpatient Clinic

By Dr. James W. Barton

ALTHOUGH the name asylum which, at one time, had the word "lunatic" associated with it, has gone completely out of use, to be replaced by mental hospital, there are still some mental patients and families of mental patients who would sooner put up with odd behavior in the home than have the patient undergo treatment in a "mental" hospital, because of their horror of the word "mental."

It is admitted that shock therapy, shock treatment—insulin, metrazol, electric—has been the biggest advance in treatment of mental ailments of recent years. When a patient can enter a mental hospital of his own free will, receive shock treatment and in a few months be able to leave hospital cured, the greatest possible help is believed attained. However, since becoming an inmate of a mental hospital even for weeks is felt in some instances to leave a "stigma," a further step has been made recently that may help patients and families who dislike the name mental hospital. I refer to brief shock treatment in an outpatient clinic.

Although I referred to this method in a previous article, I believe it worth while to mention it again, so that more families may be willing to give their loved ones this opportunity to obtain professional help.

In Psychiatric Quarterly, Drs. Louis Linn and Samuel R. Rosen (Mt. Sinai Hospital, New York City) point out that electric shock treatment on an outpatient basis offers some important advantages in treatment of these mental patients. "It permits the patient to stay on his job, at his normal social routine, and in contact with his family. It spares him mental and emotional injury of confinement in a mental hospital. It offers opportunties for influencing his environment and changing attitudes of his present environment. It offers possibilities for intensive individual treatment on a scale not usually realized within a hospital."

This Iowa Farmer Practiced Frugality, Thrift

By Wright A. Patterson

THROUGHOUT all of our history ours has been and still is a land of opportunity for those who have initiative, energy and who apply the principles of frugality and thrift when needed.

Those who are willing to work for success rather than expect others to provide for them get along. As I thought of those who have exemplified that recipe for success, I recalled an Iowa farmer who provides an excellent illustration.

He had nothing with which to start. His father had been a town carpenter, whose efforts had provided the essentials for his family, until his death, when the son was in his late teens. He left nothing of worldly goods.

To the son fell the task of providing for his widowed mother and himself. To do that, he must have a job, and the first one that was offered was that of a farm hand. The pay was $25 a month, during the planting, cultivating and harvesting seasons of each year. For what would be approximately three other months of each year, the pay would be $20 for each month.

Instead of the room and board that was usually a part of a farm hand's compensation, the boy was offered a small house, five rooms, that had at one time been the farm family home, and with it approximately an acre of ground he could cultivate as a garden, on which he could have room for chickens, two or three hogs, and a cow.

The garden, the chickens, the hogs and the cow would provide most of their food, the house a home for the widowed mother. Excess production from the chickens, the garden, the hogs and the cow were exchanged for such things as must be purchased at the local store. Each month the earnings of the son went to the fund that was to provide a farm for him.

At the end of 10 years, he had saved through the exercise of frugality and thrift the amount needed to make the down payment on 160 acres of the best of Iowa cornland. As an Iowa farmer he continued to practice his system of frugality and thrift, though he was not niggardly. He provided his mother during the years of her lifetime with as well an equipped farm home as could be found in all Iowa, but he did not waste. His farm machinery was never left to rust in the fields where they had been last used.

When I last saw that farmer he owned, all paid for, 460 acres of that Iowa farmland. He had acquired it all through his own effort, through the practice of frugality and thrift, through improving the opportunity with which this land of ours had provided him.

There are millions of such success stories for which America is responsible.

They are not confined to farms only, but include merchants, small factories, and every line of endeavor. In this land of ours, opportunity knocks at the door of most of us. But there are many who refuse to answer the knock, who prefer to wait for some one to do for them rather than apply the energy, the frugality, the thrift for themselves. They have been promised something for nothing, and prefer to wait for that promise to be fulfilled, but success will not be achieved in that way.

Ours is a land of opportunity for those who will work, for those who will practice frugality and thrift.

Automobiles, not war, are the great American killer. In all our American history deaths in battle or from wounds, from the Revolution down to the latest available reports from Korea, were responsible for the death of 439,151 of our fighting forces. As against that the number of those killed, or fatally injured by automobiles during only the past 14 years, down to late November, 1950, totaled 442,970. The non-fatal casualty lists for all wars, to late November, 1950, totaled 1,195,885. The non-fatal auto accident injuries since Jan. 1, 1937, totaled 15,503,950. We dread war, but we take for granted the automobile killings.

Wanted: Pioneers!

Lesson for October 7, 1951

IT IS on record that a Virginian in the 18th century wrote to his family that he was moving "to the far west," meaning the neighborhood of what is now Bull Run, Va., not far from Washington, D. C. Well, the "far west" moved and moved, till it reached the Pacific Beyond that ocean is the Orient, crowded past belief. Where now can the pioneer go? For pioneering is always in the blood of man. Not in every one's, to be sure; there always are contented stay-behinds; but also there always are the restless souls, not content with what has been or is. How shall pioneering instincts have their way when all frontiers are closed?

Dr. Foreman

Un-Traveling Pioneers

THE traveling pioneer has about had his day; what we now need is the un-traveling pioneer.

Such explorers are of various sorts. One is the mental pioneer, moving to new frontiers of the mind. These can be found breaking out new trails in various directions.

In science there are the men whose minds produced X-rays and plastics, the men and women who did the brainwork that lay behind the splitting of the atom; in government the men on the judge's bench, in lawyer's offices or in professors' chairs, who have been and are still thinking out the undiscovered meanings of democracy; in education the men and women who have pioneered in new ways of teaching, such as Dr. Laubach, great scholar and missionary, who has led the way in teaching the "silent billion" to read and write; these are all pioneers of the mind. God send us more!

Moral Pioneers

WE need also pioneers of the moral life. "Time," says a line in a poem by J. R. Lowell which has made its way into most hymnbooks, "makes ancient good uncouth."

For instance once upon a time, practically all Christian people supposed that slavery was not only a good thing, but that God had commanded it for all time. Whitfield, a famous evangelist, said that what America needed for its development was more slaves imported from Africa, and more home-brewing of liquor. Today this sounds so ridiculous that it is hard to believe that a Christian could have said it.

Time has made ancient good uncouth. But time alone will not do this. There must always be some moral pioneer, some one who will run the risk of being called "bad" by going out in front of popular opinion.

Between Whitfield's time and ours there have been moral pioneers, notably a Quaker named John Woolman on whose mind and heart God laid the message: Slavery is a wrong.

Pioneers of God

WE need also spiritual pioneers, persons who will move forward to new discoveries of God. For most persons, God is still an "undiscovered country"; and no man can discover God for another, though he may testify to his own discoveries. So in the realm of the spirit each must be his own pioneer; and some men and women, even from sickbeds, unable to walk as far as the door, have made great discoveries of God.

The man who is honored as a saint by three religions—Christianity, Judaism and Mohammedanism—Abraham, is sometimes known for the wrong thing. He may be thought of as a traveling pioneer because he moved several hundred miles during his lifetime. But he was not a pioneer in the "old American" meaning of that word, for the Canaan to which he went was no unsettled wilderness but a well-populated civilized country, and he never owned the land he lived on.

Abraham's pioneering was in the realm of the spirit. We know from Joshua 24:2 that even Abraham's father was an idolater; Abraham moved out from the pagan religion of his father and his people, to the discovery of the One True God. No more important journey was ever taken.

The traveling of Abraham's feet was of little importance by comparison. It was the traveling of Abraham's spirit that has most blessed us all.

Football Power in South This Year

By GRANTLAND RICE

OVER 300 N.C.A.A. colleges, embracing some 15,000 football players, have started the big jolting act. They have opened schedule that runs from September 15 to December 21, not including the various Bowls of New Year's day.

This means about as much football as even a football-minded nation can absorb without gagging.

The big gap will come from the absent stars of what would have been a magnificent Army team, now scattered to the winds.

The scramble for sectional supremacy will be as keen this season as it always is. What sector will take over the lead? East, South, Midwest, Southwest or Far West?

The complete wreckage of a powerful Army squad, the most drastic in football history, weakens the East no little. Army, Pennsylvania, Cornell, Navy, Princeton and Villanova had the East well up. Pennsylvania, Cornell, Navy and Princeton won't be too bad, with possibilities from Yale, Fordham, Dartmouth, and Columbia.

Grantland Rice

The South, combining both conferences, can offer a rugged challenge to anyone. The South can offer Tennessee, Alabama, Maryland, Miami, Kentucky, North Carolina, Duke, Georgia Tech, Georgia, LSU, with possibilities from Florida, Ole Miss and Mississippi State. Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky and Miami are dead certain to be packed with TNT.

When you move to the Midwest, you step into one of the star spots of the game. Here you have Michigan State, Ohio State, Notre Dame, Michigan, Northwestern, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and others.

This section is always one of football's strongholds. It is usually challenged by the South and the Southwest in louder tones.

Tornado Land

The Southwest is football's tornado land. The far-spreading state of Texas furnishes most of the dynamite, but not all of it.

From the Southwest we get Oklahoma, Texas A. and M., Texas, Baylor, S.M.U., Rice, T.C.U. and Missouri.

A Southwestern championship is usually a carnival of form slaughter where everything can happen.

Texas A. and M. will be high.

So will Baylor and Oklahoma. We like Texas A. and M., plus Baylor. This sector may produce five teams to match any other five. I doubt that any other section will have four teams better than Texas A. and M., Baylor, Texas and Oklahoma. Not even the Midwest.

What about the Far West? So far the early autumn dope doesn't indicate too much strength. But the Far West has a possible champion in Washington, with strong teams at California, U.C.L.A., and Southern California.

Washington can be quite tough and so can U.C.L.A., where Red Sanders has done an exceptional job of coaching. The sectional struggle should rest with the South, the Midwest and the Southwest.

Here may be the five top teams—

South—Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, Miami and North Carolina.

Midwest—Ohio State, Michigan State, Notre Dame, Wisconsin and Michigan.

Southwest—Texas A. and M., Baylor, Texas, Oklahoma, T.C.U. and Rice or S.M.U.

This time I like the South or the Southwest over the Midwest. Notre Dame and Michigan are not quite what they used to be.

The Autumn Stretch

NEW YORK—Saratoga is closed after a record month and the general excitement moves back to the Big Stem.

In the last month it seems that Princeton contributed another big winner to the new list. His name is John Gaver, trainer for the Whitney's Greentree stable, who is returning to New York tracks with a brace of thoroughbreds known as Hall of Fame and Tom Fool, two of the shining lights in the two- and three-year-old divisions.

The 1952 Kentucky Derby is now over eight months away. But there are more than a few sharp observers who have already moved Tom Fool into the front spot.

Mr. John B. Campbell will have to inspect Tom Fool, Cousin, Jet Master and also a couple of Calumet entries before he passes on his rating for the two-year-olds of 1951.

You may recall that last winter, Mr. Campbell named Uncle Miltie as the top horse with Battlefield ranked well up.

Uncle Miltie started like a shell from a howitzer until he broke.

Battlefield moved in to be the best three-year-old of the year, unless Greentree's Hall of Fame can take the lead during autumn's approaching stretch.

Edwin F. Jacobs Funeral Held At E. & R. Church

LAST RITES MONDAY AFTERNOON FOR RETIRED BUSINESS MAN

Was Prominent Hardware Dealer In Klemme For Twenty-Eight Years

Funeral services were conducted Monday Afternoon from the Klemme Evangelical and Reformed Church for Edwin F. Jacobs, 55 with the Rev. Vernon Jaberg officiating.

Mr. Jacobs died at a Mason City hospital Thursday, October, 4th, following a long illness. Edwin Jacobs was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Chris Jacobs and was born in Jackson county, Iowa, near Maquoketa on August 4, 1896. As a youth he attended the schools of his community and later when the family moved to Garner, he attended the schools there.

After serving in World War One Mr. Jacobs was employed by various Garner firms until August 14, 1919 when he came to Klemme and purchased the Gruetzmacher Bros. hardware store and was a prominent business man in North Iowa for twenty-eight years, when he was forced to abandon his business career because of poor health.

The first store burned down and was replaced by a large double-front brick building. This was again later destroyed and Jacobs erected the building now housed by the Hardware store which he sold to Fuss and Schuster in 1947.

Jacobs had been a director of The National Hardware Association and was affiliated with the Iowa Retail Hardware Association for many years. He was a member of the Klemme Evangelical and Reformed Church, the Masonic Lodge and Eastern Star Chapter of Garner, the Consistory and the Shrine.

On April 25, 1922 Edwin F. Jacobs and Myrtle G. Wistey of Clear Lake were married. To this union were born two sons, Elwyn and Dean, and a daughter, Lois who survive. He also leaves his mother, Mrs. Chris Jacobs of Garner, and one sister, Mrs. Charles (Ethel) Papousek of Clear Lake.

Interment was in the Memorial Park Cemetery west of Mason City. Mr. Jacobs was carried to his final resting place by close friends: C. G. Waterman, George Lawhorn, Sumner Trumbell and Arthur Kudje of Klemme and Leo Esbeck and Bob Gisel of Ventura. The Masonic Lodge of Garner conducted services at the grave.

BROTHER OF MRS. FRANK SCHULTZ DIED SATURDAY IN HOSPITAL

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at Hayfield for Abram V. Geddes, 65, lifelong resident of Hancock Co., who died Saturday at a Belmond hospital after being taken there following a heart attack while working with a construction crew near Kanawha.

Mr. Geddes was a brother of Mrs. Frank Schultz of Klemme. He is also survived by his aged father, son Harold of Miller, and three brothers: Guy, Chester, and Quentin, all of the Hayfield vicinity. Burial was in Madison township cemetery.

They are as follows: President, Lyle Goll; Vice-president, Jerry Studer; Secretary and treasure, Byron Greiman; and reporter, Charles Goll. We had one new member, Dean Henderson.

After the meeting, lunch was served.

SUITS FILED IN HANCOCK COURT

New cases filed in the Hancock county district court include an action filed by Michael Pederson of Forest City vs. John H Farris of Crystal Lake on a promissary note. Plaintiff asks for $2,800 with interest from September 13, 1951, and costs.

Iowa Finance Co. vs. Weston D. Hughes and Ada. Action on a promissory note with auxiliary chattel mortgage. Plaintiff asks judgement for $211.63 with interest from September 8, 1951, and for special execution for sale of personal property.

An action seeking $18,566.31 judgement for injuries received in an automobile collision on Oct. 16, 1949 has been brought by Marie Scoville of Mason City against G. J. Hjelmass of Crystal Lake. The plaintiff alleges that the car driven by Hjelmaas collided with the one driven by Joe Conibear, in which she was riding as a passenger, at the intersection on the north edge of Hayfield.

the Highway Story
IOWA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

BY RAY EASTMAN

Joe Benning stayed home until the kids were in bed, then grabbed his hat and told his wife he'd be home in a couple of hours. Mrs. Benning partly looked up from her magazine. She knew about Joe's Wednesday nights.

Joe felt guilty. He paused in the door. "Really, honey," he said, "this is the last night. I've already told the boys it's too expensive. I'm going to break it off tonight for good." Mrs. Benning would wait and see.

Joe drove five miles out of town, passing carefully through a stretch of road repair, according to a friend who went with him, and pulled in at the small roadside spot where the "Six Out of Seven" Club met once a week. The name implied that the members were husbands six days a week but "bachelors" on Wednesday night.

It was friendly company. Joe didn't feel guilty again until midnight. He thought of calling home, but decided it would make matters worse. He told the boys this was his last night, but they thought he was joking.

Later, when they all knew it actually had been Joe's last, they disbanded the club. They all knew that Joe Benning had been drunk when they let him drive away that night.

And they wondered, then, what that flare-lit stretch of highway must have looked like to Joe as he approached the repair work. They doubted if he comprehended the signs and warning lights.

They decided it must have been horrible for Joe when he finally saw the first barricade, when the highway seemed to fall away beneath him as his numbed leg fought for the brake pedal.

And they wondered if Joe died feeling guilty.

Have you ever noticed how a child is fascinated by bright metal objects? There seems to be a strong attraction for them in a gold watch, or a silver coin -- or a shiny car door handle.

In most cases this attraction provides harmless entertainment for the youngsters. But if your child innocently explores the mysteries of a car door handle, tragedy can take the place of a pleasant motor trip.

Your Iowa Safety Congress warns: Lock car doors -- prevent an accident to your child!

Whether going on a long trip or just to the grocery store, follow these precautions when children are riding in the car: (1) Make sure all doors are closed tightly and locked when you get in, (2) Don't let small children ride alone in the back seat of four foor cars, (3) Never let youngsters play with car door handles, and (4) Don't open doors until the car has stopped.

In just the past week, two Iowa accidents were reported in which children were seriously injured in falls from moving cars. Don't let this happen to your child.

Remember: Lock your car doors to tragedy -- before you start!

TRAPPING SEASON IS ANNOUNCED

The State Conservation Commission has announced a split trapping season opening noon November 10 for 60 days on "long-haired" fur-bearing animals, and opening noon November 20 for 20 days on mink, muskrat and beaver.

A special 30-day season was set on muskrat and mink opening noon November 20, on the Mississippi River north of the Muscatine city limits to the Minnesota line, east of the Milwaukee railraod tracks.

Little Wall Lake in Hamilton County was closed to muskrat and mink trapping, and Big Wall Lake in Wright County was opened from noon November 20 to midnight November 26.

Protected fur-bearing animals on which a 60-day open season is set includes raccoon, skunk, badger, opossum, and spotted skunk. There is a continuous open season on weasel, red fox, grey fox, ground hog, wolf-coyote, and a continuous closed season on otter.

The state wide 20-day open season on beaver is the longest in modern history. In 1950 a 15-day season was opened state wide for the first time.

Trapping prospects are believed good for all species except muskrat and mink which are considered only fair by Commission biologists.

KNOW... the answers to CANCER
AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

By E. D. PLASS, M. D.

(winner of the 1951 Iowa ACS bronze medal for his outstanding contributions to cancer control.)

What is a "pre-cancerous lesion?"

An abnormal condition anywhere in the body that may develop into cancer. Experience has shown that certain non-malignant changes, if not eliminated by treatment, may become cancerous. Many if them never become malignant but some do, and the percentage chance is high enough that they are looked upon as the precursors of cancer, and generally treated as such.

White Spot disease (leukoplakia) on the mucous membranes, especially of the mouth, dry scaly areas on the skin particularly of the face, sores caused by broken teeth of poorly fitting dentures; dark moles so situated that they are constantly irritated; and some unrepaired injuries due to childbirth are examples of what are called "pre-cancerous lesions." Adequate treatment with the elimination of sources of irritation may be expected to prevent the development of cancer.

Do the lower animals have cancer?

Yes. All the common animals, domestic and wild, are subject to cancer of one type or another. Certain small laboratory animals can be so inbred that the majority of them will develop cancer of a certain organ at a definate age. Cancer can also be transplanted from one animal to another by placing a small piece of tumor beneath the skin. These facts are widely used in present-day cancer research. Colonies of animals with spontaneous of transplanted cancer are employed to test innumerable compounds produced in the laboratory in the hope of finding one which will make the tumor regress. Thus far, although there have been some promising leads, none has been found which will kill the cancer and which is sufficiently non-toxic to use in human therapy.

In God's design of life for us
That he himself has planned,
There are so many hidden things
We do not understand;
But he would have us know his plan
Is such a wondrous one,
That when we do not understand
To say: "Thy will be done!"

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

International Uniform Sunday School Lessons

BY DR. KENNETH J. FOREMAN

SCRIPTURE: Genesis 27:1—33.17.
DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 4.

God's Untuned Harp

Lesson for October 14, 1951

CAN the perfect God make use of an imperfect man? He has to; there is no other kind. God is the perfect musician; his melodies and harmonies are flawless; but he has to play these on the harp of humanity, twanging strings easily broken, never long well-tuned.

Dr. Foreman

One such doubtful string was young Jacob. He improved immensely, later in life; but at the time of the incident described in Genesis 28 he was a very rough diamond indeed. His own home was too hot for him. His father had been bitterly disappointed in him; his twin and only brother Esau had sworn to kill him at the first chance. He was a swindling liar, leaving home on the run.

If he had treated his neighbors with the same lack of conscience he had shown toward Isaac and Esau, there must have been "many a dry eye" when the news went around that Jacob had left town. As a matter of fact, he kept on, for some years after this, being the same sort of sharp trader he had always been.

His dream at Bethel did not convert him, as is sometimes thought; if it did, his conversion waited 20 years to "take." If the reader will examine Jacob's vow in Gen. 28:20-22, he can see that it does not express a very lofty view of religion on Jacob's part. Jacob makes his promise to the Lord with a large IF attached; IF the Lord will prosper him, keep him safe, bring him back and so forth, THEN he will give the Lord ten per cent. Who would not pay a ten per cent commission for guaranteed protection and prosperity? No, we cannot say that Jacob at this time was saintly.

God's Purpose

AND yet God spoke to him, made great promises to him. Was this only a conceited dream of Jacob's? It was a dream, of course, as the writer frankly says (verse 12); but was the dream only the kind of thing that psychologists call "wish-fulfilment," with no meaning except to show what Jacob had been thinking about? Or did the dream stand for something real?

The general belief of the church is that God really did have a concern for this man and did speak to him through his dream, even though it was the kind of dream which perhaps only a Jacob could have had.

But how could the perfect God "make a covenant" or come to any terms with such a man as Jacob then was? The answer is probably in the story itself and in what followed it. God had a purpose far beyond Jacob the man. He had a plan for him too; but it fitted into a far greater plan for mankind. "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" refers, Christians believe, to Jesus Christ and what he has meant and will mean to the world. Without Jacob, and the race which would call him their ancestor, Jesus would not have been.

God's Harp Has Many Strings

ONE of the most remarkable titles for God in the Bible is "the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob" (Exodus 3:6). We might expect the first name; we are astonished to hear the other two.

Abraham, of course, was a great spiritual pioneer. He was great in other ways too; a man who would be outstanding in any age, in any place,—one of the great religious geniuses of all time. Of course God is the God of such men, we expect it.

But what about Isaac and Jacob? Isaac was a nonentity, a weak character, far from bright. Even his sins were second-hand. As for Jacob, even after he became a changed man, as in time he did, his old crooked record remained a fact. The Bible does not try to conceal it.

Then can God be the God of the weak and the God of the sinner? Yes, that is the glory of the God who is revealed in his Word. Other religions know of gods who are friends of top-level human beings, genuises and saints; only the religion of the Bible knows of a God who takes a personal interest in the weak and who pursues the sinner to change him.

Only the Bible knows of a God who draws to himself all sorts and conditions of men, and makes use of them for his great and gracious purposes.

Too True!

The hard-to-please customer shook her head. "I don't like these shoes," she told the salesman. "The soles are too thick."

"Is that the only objection, madam?" asked the salesman. She nodded. "Then, madam," he added, "if you take the shoes I can assure you that the objection will gradually wear away."

Not So Easy Now

A young fellow, a clerk in a store, troubled by the cost of living, went in to ask his testy old employer for a raise. The employer listened impatiently. Finally, he exclaimed:

"Why, when I was your age I supported a family on what you're getting now."

"Yes," retorted the young man "but they didn't have cash registers in those days."

Serve Tempting Dishes For Cool Weather

Try a hot corned beef hash sandwich for a hearty snack. It's easily prepared by heating the hash in a skillet with sweet pickle relish, salt and grated onion for seasoning. Spread on toast, top with a tomato slice and another piece of toast.

Curried chicken soup starts any meal off right. Simply add one teaspoon of curry powder to diluted canned chicken soup. Sprinkle with parsley before serving.

Kidney beans are popular fare and can be used nicely for a hearty sandwich. Season canned kidney beans with chopped onion, catsup and worcestershire sauce, then spread on split hamburger buns. Top with sliced tomato and strips of bacon; broil until bacon is crisp

When menfolk want a snack, none of them will turn down this one: mash canned sardines with their oil, add chopped stuffed olives and enough chili sauce and mayonnaise to make the mixture spread easily on crackers.

Crime in America

By ESTES KEFAUVER
United States Senator

Four of a Series

Greasy Thumb and Chicago Politicians

Two Chicago hoodlums in whom the Senate Crime Committee had particular interest were Jacob Guzik and Anthony Accardo. We felt these infamous, rather strangely assorted partners might hold a key to the whole question of organized interstate crime, so widely dispersed were their nefarious activities.

Accardo, back when he was a strong-arm man in Chicago's underworld and reputedly a bodyguard for the late "Machine-Gun Jack" McGurn, used an appropriate alias—"Joe Batters."

Guzik is a pouchy-eyed little man of 64, with a ravaged face that looks as if it were made of wax left too long near a hot fire. The warrant for his arrest as a missing witness was not served on him until the final week of our scheduled public hearings.

Guzik is a manipulator rather than a muscle man; he acquired his nickname—Greasy Thumb— from the fact that he was business manager and pay-off man for Al Capone.

It is a strange quirk of gangdom that these two men should be partners and joint leaders of the Capone syndicate Police records show that Accardo was picked up in 1945 for questioning about a gang style kidnaping of Guzik, who reputedly had to pay $75,000 to regain his freedom. Nothing ever came of this episode, for Guzik stoutly insisted it was just a misunderstanding over a "business transaction."

We didn't learn much directly from either Accardo answered only a few elementary questions refusing even to tell about things already part of police and court records.

The gray-visaged Guzik was worse When we asked him his age, he refused to answer on the grounds that it might "incriminate me or tend to incriminate me." After he had parroted this monotonous phrase some 80 times, Senator Wiley asked if he had consulted a lawyer; Guzik answered that he had not.

"Where did you get this phrase you have been using all the time?" asked Senator Wiley.

"I have heard it on television," Guzik replied.

In Chicago's teeming Negro district, "policy wheels"—a variety of the "numbers" racket in which are daily drawings for combinations of winning numbers—have come to be big business. An estimated $1.5 billion has been played on them in the past five years. Operations of this magnitude, of course, could not exist without graft being paid to dishonest police for protection.

There is a melancholy moral in this when one considers that the staggering sum is amassed from the nickels, dimes and quarters of the inhabitants of some of the worst slums in America. There are numerous wheels operating—with fanciful names such as the "Roman Silver," the "Calcutta-Green Dragon," the "Jack-Pot Whirlaway-Alabama-Georgia."

One witness we summoned was Edward Jones, a one-time Pullman porter. He was a partner with his wife, mother, brother and two other men in a policy wheel known as "The Maine, Idaho and Ohio." Its net profits, 1946 through 1949, came to $3,656,968.22.

In 1946, Ed Jones was kidnaped and held until his family paid $100,000 ransom. Even though five years had elapsed since the kidnaping at the time we questioned him, the exporter, who wore a huge starsapphire ring, was exceedingly timorous. He insisted he did not even know whether his abductors were white persons or Negroes because they were "blind-folded" at the time.

Whether Jones was kidnaped solely for ransom, or whether it was a "muscle" operation whereby gangsters took over part of the business, never has been established. Jones himself denies that the "Main-Ida-ho-Ohio" has been "muscled." However, Ed Jones and his brother, George—though each continues to draw a 20 per cent share of the profits—have lived in Mexico City since the kidnaping.

Our Chicago hearings also provided a case history of how a one-time hoodlum can establish himself in a legitimate business and become enormously wealthy. The case was that of Joseph Charles (Joe) Fusco, 48, now the operating vice-president of Gold Seal Liquors, Inc. (wholesale distributors), a stockholder in four other liquor distributing companies and part-owner of a brewery.

From a sales volume standpoint, Fusco boasted Gold Seal was Chicago's "No. 1" dealer. His own net worth was possibly $1,000,000 and the book value of Gold Seal alone, of which he owns 25 per cent, was $2,200,000, he told us.

Virgil Peterson of the Chicago crime commission gave us this thumbnail report: "Joe Fusco designated several years ago as a public enemy, during the prohibition era, was a principal lieutenant in the Capone syndicate, handling the manufacture and distribution of illicit beer He is presently suspected of being the respectable front in the liquor industry for the syndicate . It has been stated that the syndicate owns or controls at least 17 per cent of the retail liquor stores in Chicago . . "

Peterson also identified Rocco De Stefano, with whom Fusco admitted doing business, as an "important syndicate man."

* * *

Painfully, with the witness making long speeches at almost every question, Committee Counsel Rudolph Halley extracted from Fusco some details of how he gave away 20 to 25 cases of whiskey as Christmas gifts to public officials and other friends. Practically every cop in the district came around at Christmas time for a bottle or two, Fusco said He became belligerent when asked who received his Christmas liquor. "If you were in Chicago," he barked at Halley, "maybe I would send you a case, too."

Halley retorted: "Maybe I would return it to you."

"I don't know," said Fusco, arrogantly. "I have never got any back."

There was an ugly aftermath to Fusco's appearance. Apparently the mob got the idea that he had "talked." Ten days later a black powder bomb went off in the doorway of his Gold Seal warehouse. The newspapers captioned a picture of Fusco inspecting the damage: "He Talked to Kefauver."

Everywhere we went, the committee found political immorality, but in Chicago the rawness was particularly shocking. I previously mentioned Dan Serritella, simultaneously a state senator, scratch sheet operator, and business partner with Greasy Thumb Guzik. We accumulated evidence that proved the connections of the Capone gang with politicians of both major parties. The mobsters played politics strictly for their own interests. When we asked ex-Caponeite Philip D'Andrea whether Capone had been a Republican or Democrat, D'Andrea replied: "He was a Republican when it fitted his clothes, I guess, and a Democrat otherwise."

The pro-Capone bloc in the legislature included Democrats and Republicans alike. For instance, Virgil Peterson testified that Sen. Roland Libonati, a Democrat, "has been pictured with Al Capone and with 'Machine-Gun Jack' McGurn."

Another bloc member was James J. Adducci, a Republican and for 18 years a member of the Illinois legislature. Mr. Adducci appeared before us and outlined his political philosophy and certain facets of his career. He has been a friend and consort of numerous notorious Capone gangsters, and admitted having been arrested frequently himself on numerous charges—including kidnaping—but never convicted.

For eight years, according to Adducci, he has been getting a commission of "between $5,000 and $6,000 or $6,500" by selling stationery and envelopes to the state. He also boasted of having control of about 40 patronage jobs, including 10 men on the staff of the sheriff of Cook county, and "a couple of highway police." Adducci cynically told us that "my conscience made me" oppose the crime commission bill. Asked if he ever had studied the bill, Adducci roughly answered: "Hell, no, I didn't study it!"

"I come from a very funny district," he also told us. "I have every element there is in the world, I guess, in my district, I have the pimp, the pack-roller, the safe-blower, the dope fiend and every other damned thing in there. I mean, I come from the West Side of Chicago, a very poor district. All those elements are in there. Skid Row, you may have heard of Skid Row."

The chairman: "You never have any trouble getting elected, do you?"

Adducci: "No, I don't, Senator."

REQUESTS PROBE

Kefauver Asks Probe of Louisiana Case

WASHINGTON—Senator Estes Kefauver has asked for a U. S. probe into what he describes as the apparently "flagrant attempt to intimidate the press" in the state of Louisiana. Senators Tobey and Hunt, also backed the motion.

Five Lake Charles, La., newspapermen received indictments as results of a series of law enforcement articles published by the Lake Charles American Press. The charges include that of "using legal double-talk" in the articles.

Kefauver said: "It appears to us that this is a flagrant attempt to intimidate the free press and citizens, who were engaged in their constitutionally guaranteed prerogative of interrogating and criticizing public officials and conditions in their county.

Cancer Mortality On The Decline

Encouraging indications of a decline in cancer mortality are reported by statisticians who base their findings upon the postwar experience of millions of industrial policyholders.

Favorable developments in the cancer picture are most evident, the statisticians point out, when the recent trend of mortality is studied according to whether the primary site of the disease is accessible or inaccessible to diagnosis.

For the accessible sites as a group, both men and women in the insurance experience recorded declines in the death rate from 1946-47 to 1949-50, men by 2.4 per cent and women by 7.2. There was a reduction in female mortality from almost all the accessible specific types of cancer.

In the case of the inaccessible sites as a whole, the death rate among women declined 1.1 per cent, but, on the other hand, that among men showed an increase of 4 per cent. However, both sexes showed decreases for such specific sites as the stomach, intestines, other digestive organs, bladder, and liver.

Considerable increases in death rates were recorded for cancers of the lungs and other respiratory areas.

Greatly intensified efforts have been put forth on all fronts since the end of the wa. to fight cancer. These have included the expansion of diagnostic facilities, the opening of more special cancer hospitals, and intensified cancer research. In addition, the statisticians state "great emphasis is still placed upon early recognition and treatment of the disease."

Good or Bad?

"I had a mighty queer surprise this morning," remarked the stock broker. "I put on my last summer's thin suit on account of this extraordinary hot weather, and in one of the trousers pockets I found a big roll of bills which I had entirely forgotten."

"Were any of them receipted?" asked a pessimist.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

HALLOWEEN DROP DOUGHNUTS

Crispy brown outside, delicate and fluffy inside, an easy-to-make holiday treat.

ADD 2 pkg. RED STAR Special Active Dry Yeast to ½ cup warm water (110°-115°). Let stand. SCALD ¾ cup milk. Pour into large bowl with ¼ cup sugar, 1 tsp. salt, ½ tsp. each of mace and nutmeg. Blend together and cool to lukewarm. STIR yeast-mixture well and pour into bowl. MIX IN ½ cup soft shortening, 2 eggs, with 3½ cups sifted flour. BEAT until batter is smooth—about 100 strokes. SCRAPE down dough from sides of bowl. COVER and let rise in warm place until doubled—about 30 minutes. STIR down and let rest while fat is heating to 350° (to test – a 1-in. cube of bread browns in 60 seconds) DROP batter from teaspoon into hot fat. Turn when edges show color, frying golden brown —about 1½ minutes on each side.

DO'S FOR DOUGHNUTS
- DO have fat 1½ to 2-in. deep in heavy pan for shallow fat frying.
- DO keep temperature around 350-375 degrees. Too hot fat forms crust before doughnuts are cooked through, too cool fat means doughnuts will soak up fat.
- DO turn doughnuts when edges show golden brown color.
- DO drain doughnuts on absorbent paper, such as paper toweling, near a warm place.
- DO sugar coat while still warm.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

International Uniform Sunday School Lessons

BY DR. KENNETH J. FOREMAN

SCRIPTURE: Genesis 27:1—33:17.
DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 4.

God's Untuned Harp

Lesson for October 14, 1951

CAN the perfect God make use of an imperfect man? He has to; there is no other kind. God is the perfect musician; his melodies and harmonies are flawless; but he has to play these on the harp of humanity, twanging strings easily broken, never long well-tuned.

Dr. Foreman

One such doubtful string was young Jacob. He improved immensely, later in life; but at the time of the incident described in Genesis 28 he was a very rough diamond indeed. His own home was too hot for him. His father had been bitterly disappointed in him; his twin and only brother Esau had sworn to kill him at the first chance. He was a swindling liar, leaving home on the run.

If he had treated his neighbors with the same lack of conscience he had shown toward Isaac and Esau, there must have been "many a dry eye" when the news went around that Jacob had left town. As a matter of fact, he kept on, for some years after this, being the same sort of sharp trader he had always been.

His dream at Bethel did not convert him, as is sometimes thought; if it did, his conversion waited 20 years to "take." If the reader will examine Jacob's vow in Gen. 28:20-22, he can see that it does not express a very lofty view of religion on Jacob's part. Jacob makes his promise to the Lord with a large IF attached; IF the Lord will prosper him, keep him safe, bring him back and so forth, THEN he will give the Lord ten per cent. Who would not pay a ten per cent commission for guaranteed protection and prosperity? No, we cannot say that Jacob at this time was saintly.

God's Purpose

AND yet God spoke to him, made great promises to him. Was this only a conceited dream of Jacob's? It was a dream, of course, as the writer frankly says (verse 12); but was the dream only the kind of thing that psychologists call "wish-fulfilment," with no meaning except to show what Jacob had been thinking about? Or did the dream stand for something real?

The general belief of the church is that God really did have a concern for this man and did speak to him through his dream, even though it was the kind of dream which perhaps only a Jacob could have had.

But how could the perfect God "make a covenant" or come to any terms with such a man as Jacob then was? The answer is probably in the story itself and in what followed it. God had a purpose far beyond Jacob the man. He had a plan for him too; but it fitted into a far greater plan for mankind. "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" refers, Christians believe, to Jesus Christ and what he has meant and will mean to the world. Without Jacob, and the race which would call him their ancestor, Jesus would not have been.

God's Harp Has Many Strings

ONE of the most remarkable titles for God in the Bible is "the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob" (Exodus 3:6). We might expect the first name; we are astonished to hear the other two.

Abraham, of course, was a great spiritual pioneer. He was great in other ways too; a man who would be outstanding in any age, in any place,—one of the great religious geniuses of all time. Of course God is the God of such men, we expect it.

But what about Isaac and Jacob? Isaac was a nonentity, a weak character, far from bright. Even his sins were second-hand. As for Jacob, even after he became a changed man, as in time he did, his old crooked record remained a fact. The Bible does not try to conceal it.

Then can God be the God of the weak and the God of the sinner? Yes, that is the glory of the God who is revealed in his Word. Other religions know of gods who are friends of top-level human beings, genuises and saints; only the religion of the Bible knows of a God who takes a personal interest in the weak and who pursues the sinner to change him.

Only the Bible knows of a God who draws to himself all sorts and conditions of men, and makes use of them for his great and gracious purposes.

Not So Easy Now

A young fellow, a clerk in a store, troubled by the cost of living, went in to ask his testy old employer for a raise. The employer listened impatiently. Finally, he exclaimed:

"Why, when I was your age I supported a family on what you're getting now."

"Yes," retorted the young man "but they didn't have cash registers in those days."

Too True!

The hard-to-please customer shook her head. "I don't like these shoes," she told the salesman. "The soles are too thick."

"Is that the only objection, madam?" asked the salesman She nodded. "Then, madam," he added, "if you take the shoes I can assure you that the objection will gradually wear away."

Serve Tempting Dishes For Cool Weather

Try a hot corned beef hash sandwich for a hearty snack. It's easily prepared by heating the hash in a skillet with sweet pickle relish, salt and grated onion for seasoning. Spread on toast, top with a tomato slice and another piece of toast.

Curried chicken soup starts any meal off right. Simply add one teaspoon of curry powder to diluted canned chicken soup. Sprinkle with parsley before serving.

Kidney beans are popular fare and can be used nicely for a hearty sandwich. Season canned kidney beans with chopped onion, catsup and worcestershire sauce, then spread on split hamburger buns. Top with sliced tomato and strips of bacon; broil until bacon is crisp

When menfolk want a snack, none of them will turn down this one: mash canned sardines with their oil, add chopped stuffed olives and enough chili sauce and mayonnaise to make the mixture spread easily on crackers.

Crime in America

By ESTES KEFAUVER
United States Senator

Four of a Series

Greasy Thumb and Chicago Politicians

Two Chicago hoodlums in whom the Senate Crime Committee had particular interest were Jacob Guzik and Anthony Accardo. We felt these infamous, rather strangely assorted partners might hold a key to the whole question of organized interstate crime, so widely dispersed were their nefarious activities.

Accardo, back when he was a strong-arm man in Chicago's underworld and reputedly a bodyguard for the late "Machine-Gun Jack" McGurn, used an appropriate alias—"Joe Batters."

Guzik is a pouchy-eyed little man of 64, with a ravaged face that looks as if it were made of wax left too long near a hot fire. The warrant for his arrest as a missing witness was not served on him until the final week of our scheduled public hearings.

Guzik is a manipulator rather than a muscle man; he acquired his nickname—Greasy Thumb— from the fact that he was business manager and pay-off man for Al Capone.

It is a strange quirk of gangdom that these two men should be partners and joint leaders of the Capone syndicate. Police records show that Accardo was picked up in 1945 for questioning about a gang style kidnaping of Guzik, who reputedly had to pay $75,000 to regain his freedom. Nothing ever came of this episode, for Guzik stoutly insisted it was just a misunderstanding over a "business transaction."

We didn't learn much directly from either Accardo answered only a few elementary questions refusing even to tell about things already part of police and court records.

The gray-visaged Guzik was worse When we asked him his age, he refused to answer on the grounds that it might "incriminate me or tend to incriminate me." After he had parroted this monotonous phrase some 80 times, Senator Wiley asked if he had consulted a lawyer; Guzik answered that he had not.

"Where did you get this phrase you have been using all the time?" asked Senator Wiley.

"I have heard it on television," Guzik replied.

In Chicago's teeming Negro district, "policy wheels"—a variety of the "numbers" racket in which are daily drawings for combinations of winning numbers—have come to be big business. An estimated $1 5 billion has been played on them in the past five years. Operations of this magnitude, of course, could not exist without graft being paid to dishonest police for protection.

There is a melancholy moral in this when one considers that the staggering sum is amassed from the nickels, dimes and quarters of the inhabitants of some of the worst slums in America. There are numerous wheels operating—with fanciful names such as the "Roman Silver," the "Calcutta-Green Dragon," the "Jack-Pot Whirlaway-Alabama-Georgia."

One witness we summoned was Edward Jones, a one-time Pullman porter. He was a partner with his wife, mother, brother and two other men in a policy wheel known as "The Maine, Idaho and Ohio." Its net profits, 1946 through 1949, came to $3,656,968.22.

In 1946, Ed Jones was kidnaped and held until his family paid $100,000 ransom. Even though five years had elapsed since the kidnaping at the time we questioned him, the exporter, who wore a huge starsapphire ring, was exceedingly timorous. He insisted he did not even know whether his abductors were white persons or Negroes because they were "blind-folded" at the time.

Whether Jones was kidnaped solely for ransom, or whether it was a "muscle" operation whereby gangsters took over part of the business, never has been established. Jones himself denies that the "Main-Idaho-Ohio" has been "muscled." However, Ed Jones and his brother, George—though each continues to draw a 20 per cent share of the profits—have lived in Mexico City since the kidnaping.

Our Chicago hearings also provided a case history of how a one-time hoodlum can establish himself in a legitimate business and become enormously wealthy. The case was that of Joseph Charles (Joe) Fusco, 48, now the operating vice-president of Gold Seal Liquors, Inc. (wholesale distributors), a stockholder in four other liquor distributing companies and part-owner of a brewery.

From a sales volume standpoint, Fusco boasted Gold Seal was Chicago's "No. 1" dealer. His own net worth was possibly $1,000,000 and the book value of Gold Seal alone, of which he owns 25 per cent, was $2,200,000, he told us.

Virgil Peterson of the Chicago crime commission gave us this thumbnail report: "Joe Fusco designated several years ago as a public enemy, during the prohibition era, was a principal lieutenant in the Capone syndicate, handling the manufacture and distribution of illicit beer He is presently suspected of being the respectable front in the liquor industry for the syndicate . It has been stated that the syndicate owns or controls at least 17 per cent of the retail liquor stores in Chicago . . ."

Peterson also identified Rocco De Stefano, with whom Fusco admitted doing business, as an "important syndicate man."

* * *

Painfully, with the witness making long speeches at almost every question, Committee Counsel Rudolph Halley extracted from Fusco some details of how he gave away 20 to 25 cases of whiskey as Christmas gifts to public officials and other friends. Practically every cop in the district came around at Christmas time for a bottle or two, Fusco said. He became belligerent when asked who received his Christmas liquor. "If you were in Chicago," he barked at Halley, "maybe I would send you a case, too."

Halley retorted: "Maybe I would return it to you."

"I don't know," said Fusco, arrogantly. "I have never got any back."

There was an ugly aftermath to Fusco's appearance. Apparently the mob got the idea that he had "talked." Ten days later a black powder bomb went off in the doorway of his Gold Seal warehouse. The newspapers captioned a picture of Fusco inspecting the damage: "He Talked to Kefauver."

Everywhere we went, the committee found political immorality, but in Chicago the rawness was particularly shocking. I previously mentioned Dan Serritella, simultaneously a state senator, scratch sheet operator, and business partner with Greasy Thumb Guzik. We accumulated evidence that proved the connections of the Capone gang with politicians of both major parties. The mobsters played politics strictly for their own interests. When we asked ex-Caponeite Philip D'Andrea whether Capone had been a Republican or Democrat, D'Andrea replied: "He was a Republican when it fitted his clothes, I guess, and a Democrat otherwise."

The pro-Capone bloc in the legislature included Democrats and Republicans alike. For instance, Virgil Peterson testified that Sen. Roland Libonati, a Democrat, "has been pictured with Al Capone and with 'Machine-Gun Jack' McGurn."

Another bloc member was James J. Adducci, a Republican and for 18 years a member of the Illinois legislature. Mr. Adducci appeared before us and outlined his political philosophy and certain facets of his career. He has been a friend and consort of numerous notorious Capone gangsters, and admitted having been arrested frequently himself on numerous charges—including kidnaping—but never convicted.

For eight years, according to Adducci, he has been getting a commission of "between $5,000 and $6,000 or $6,500" by selling stationery and envelopes to the state. He also boasted of having control of about 40 patronage jobs, including 10 men on the staff of the sheriff of Cook county, and "a couple of highway police." Adducci cynically told us that "my conscience made me" oppose the crime commission bill. Asked if he ever had studied the bill, Adducci roughly answered: "Hell, no, I didn't study it!"

"I come from a very funny district," he also told us. "I have every element there is in the world, I guess, in my district, I have the pimp, the pack-roller, the safe-blower, the dope fiend and every other damned thing in there. I mean, I come from the West Side of Chicago, a very poor district. All those elements are in there. Skid Row, you may have heard of Skid Row."

The chairman: "You never have any trouble getting elected, do you?"

Adducci: "No, I don't, Senator."

REQUESTS PROBE

Kefauver Asks Probe of Louisiana Case

WASHINGTON—Senator Estes Kefauver has asked for a U. S. probe into what he describes as the apparently "flagrant attempt to intimidate the press" in the state of Louisiana. Senators Tobey and Hunt, also backed the motion.

Five Lake Charles, La., newspapermen received indictments as results of a series of law enforcement articles published by the Lake Charles American Press. The charges include that of "using legal double-talk" in the articles.

Kefauver said: "It appears to us that this is a flagrant attempt to intimidate the free press and citizens, who were engaged in their constitutionally guaranteed prerogative of interrogating and criticizing public officials and conditions in their county.

Cancer Mortality On The Decline

Encouraging indications of a decline in cancer mortality are reported by statisticians who base their findings upon the postwar experience of millions of industrial policyholders.

Favorable developments in the cancer picture are most evident, the statisticians point out, when the recent trend of mortality is studied according to whether the primary site of the disease is accessible or inaccessible to diagnosis.

For the accessible sites as a group, both men and women in the insurance experience recorded declines in the death rate from 1946-47 to 1949-50, men by 2.4 per cent and women by 7.2. There was a reduction in female mortality from almost all the accessible specific types of cancer.

In the case of the inaccessible sites as a whole, the death rate among women declined 1.1 per cent, but, on the other hand, that among men showed an increase of 4 per cent. However, both sexes showed decreases for such specific sites as the stomach, intestines, other digestive organs, bladder, and liver.

Considerable increases in death rates were recorded for cancers of the lungs and other respiratory areas.

Greatly intensified efforts have been put forth on all fronts since the end of the war to fight cancer. These have included the expansion of diagnostic facilities, the opening of more special cancer hospitals, and intensified cancer research. In addition, the statisticians state "great emphasis is still placed upon early recognition and treatment of the disease."

Good or Bad?

"I had a mighty queer surprise this morning," remarked the stock broker. "I put on my last summer's thin suit on account of this extraordinary hot weather, and in one of the trousers pockets I found a big roll of bills which I had entirely forgotten."

"Were any of them receipted?" asked a pessimist.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to

REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

HALLOWEEN DROP DOUGHNUTS

Crispy brown outside, delicate and fluffy inside, an easy-to-make holiday treat.

ADD 2 pkg. RED STAR Special Active Dry Yeast to ½ cup warm water (110°-115°). Let stand. SCALD ¾ cup milk. Pour into large bowl with ¼ cup sugar, 1 tsp. salt, ½ tsp. each of mace and nutmeg. Blend together and cool to lukewarm. STIR yeast-mixture well and pour into bowl. MIX IN ½ cup soft shortening, 2 eggs, with 3½ cups sifted flour. BEAT until batter is smooth—about 100 strokes. SCRAPE down dough from sides of bowl. COVER and let rise in warm place until doubled—about 30 minutes. STIR down and let rest while fat is heating to 350° (to test—a 1-in. cube of bread browns in 60 seconds) DROP batter from teaspoon into hot fat. Turn when edges show color, frying golden brown —about 1½ minutes on each side.

DO'S FOR DOUGHNUTS

- DO have fat 1½ to 2-in. deep in heavy pan for shallow fat frying.
- DO keep temperature around 350-375 degrees. Too hot fat forms crust before doughnuts are cooked through, too cool fat means doughnuts will soak up fat.
- DO turn doughnuts when edges show golden brown color.
- DO drain doughnuts on absorbent paper, such as paper toweling, near a warm place.
- DO sugar coat while still warm.

What adds that crowning touch?

BUTTER!

Piping hot biscuits . . . rolls—or vegetables, pan cakes, potatoes—they're ALL so much better with plenty of butter. More nutritious, too. The natural golden color comes from the rich golden cream—since four pints of cream go into the making of each pound of butter.

For nurition, health, for downright goodness . . . . there's nothing finer than the high-score Iowa butter for which our creamery has built such a reputation. Use better generously in cooking, and at every meal.

Iowa's Honey War

Ever hear of Iowa's "honey war"?

In 1816 surveyors marked the "Des Moines River rapids" as dividing line between Iowa and Missouri.

Then, 21 years later, Missouri claimed a rapids near Keosauqua was really the line. This would have moved a grove of "bee trees" to the Missouri side. And folks, those days, depended on wild honey for their "sweetenin'."

Missouri called out its militia to defend its claim. Iowa raised 1200 volunteers. Luckily, some level heads finally calmed things down.

I guess folks don't change much, after all. We have hot heads now, as then. Right here in our town there are always a few who'd like to edge up on someone else's rights, as to this or that.

But, luckily, as in the "honey war" . . . there are more sound, level-headed citizens than radicals . . . more broad-minded people than narrow-minded. That's why our town's a good place to live . . . why Iowa and Missouri are good places to live.

The plaintiffs further allege in their petition that none of said defendants have in fact any right, title or interest in or to the above described premises or any part thereof, or any color of right, title or interest therein, and that the plaintiffs and their immediate grantors of their respective properties above described have been in the sole, complete, open, notorious, actual and undisputed and adverse possession thereof for more than ten years last past, under claim of right, title, and ownership thereof, adverse to the defendants and each of them, and that these plaintiffs and their said grantors have been for more than ten years the acknowledged sole, undisputed and unqualified owners thereof, and that by reason thereof and by the lapse of time and laches of the defendants in failing to assert any pretended claim thereto, and in permitting valuable improvements to be made thereon relying upon such possession and ownership, the defendants are estopped from asserting any right, title, claim or interest therein, adverse to these plaintiff's title in their respective properties.

These plaintiffs further pray in their petition that a decree be entered by the Court, establishing title to the above described real property in each of them as above set forth, against the adverse claims of the defendants and each and all of them, and all unknown claimants and all persons unknown having or claiming any right, title or interest in or to said premises, and that all persons claiming by, through or under them and all persons claiming by descent, devise, dower, conveyance, mortgage, deed of trust, assignment or succession, or any other method, be forever barred and estopped from ever having, asserting or claiming any right, title or interest in or to the said premises or any part thereof, adverse to the plaintiffs or the plaintiffs' title therein, and that the plaintiffs' title to their respective premises above described be quieted, established and confirmed. The plaintiffs in their petition further pray for such other and further equitable relief as to the Court may seem just and proper

For full and further particulars, see petition now on file as aforesaid.

You are further notified that unless you appear before said Court at the Courthouse in Garner, Hancock County, Iowa, on or before the 19th day of November, A. D. 1951, your default will be entered and judgment and decree rendered against you for the relief demanded in the petition, and the title to the real property above described belonging to these plaintiffs will be quieted in them, and you will be forever barred and estopped from having or claiming any right, title, or interest therein, adverse to said plaintiffs in their respective properties.

ENRICHED BREAD

Enrichment of White Bread With Vitamin B Started 10 Years Ago

Enriched white bread in the past ten years has resulted in the virtual wiping out of two deficiency diseases and has contributed materially to better health and increased vigor to the American people, according to statements from outstanding authorities in medical and nutritional science.

Bakers all over America this year are celebrating the decennial bread enrichment. It was in March, 1941, when the enrichment program got under way on a national scale.

White bread "enrichment" is simply the raising in bread of the content of the B vitamins—niacin, thiamin and riboflavin—and iron. Those elements are produced in volume in the process of milling wheat into flour.

The two diseases which result from a lack of the B vitamins are called beriberi heart disease and pellagra. While the average person probably is not too familiar with either of these, they were not at all uncommon in the United States prior to 1941.

The B vitamins perform an important function in the body. They make it possible to eat an ample quantity of food but still suffer from malnutrition if B vitamins were not present in sufficient quantity to make the proteins, carbohydrates and other food properties adequately absorbed into the body.

It was indications of this lack of proper nourishment which was causing considerable concern among doctors and nutritionists in the 1930's. The state of the nation's health was definitely not good and the fact was pointed up sharply when the draft started in 1940 and 1941. Thousands of young men were rejected for military service and Families such as the one pictured above enjoy better health today, leading scientists declare, because the bread they consume has been enriched with vitamins and minerals.

the cause for some of the rejections could be traced to malnutrition.

The discovery of how to make B vitamins by chemical combinations in 1936 made it possible to provide the people with the vitamins. The method of getting the vitamins to the mass of the people was another problem. Consultation between government health authorities and scientists brought about an approach to the flour millers and bakers.

These meetings culminated in agreement that bread was the natural place for the vitamins and the program was launched in 1941. The B vitamins belonged in bread, since they were present in the original whole grain. Bread is a universal food, appearing most frequently in most families. And bread is one of the least expensive of foods. These facts added up to the obvious conclusion that the best place to provide B vitamins was in bread. Enriched bread thus came into being

TO THE AVERAGE consumer, enrichment has meant general betterment of physical well being, the scientists say. Studies among children reveal, in test cases, that youngsters who received B vitamins were more vigorous, more alert, less peevish, while those whose diets did not include B vitamins were listless, inclined to cry more readily and showed little inclination for play.

Changing living habits were major factors in making the enrichment program necessary. Around 1900, 95 per cent of all the bread consumed in America was made in the home. Today, 95 per cent is made by bakers.

Flour 50 years ago was not as fully refined as it is today and more of the nutritional elements of wheat were obtained in the daily diet. Better transportation and better methods of processing, shipping and handling food brought a greater variety to daily diet.

Each American used to eat more than 200 pounds of cereal products each year. Recently the average has been about 135 pounds. Too, the consumer insists on a white and light loaf of bread which means less of the B vitamins are present in the product reaching the consumer table.

Health authorities who were more and more alarmed by the declining state of national health in the mid-30's made strenuous efforts to promote greater use of whole wheat bread, but with no noticeable results. The consumer still wanted white bread.

Today, a huge percentage of all white bread made by American bakers is enriched.

MIRROR Of Your MIND

How To Take Report Cards

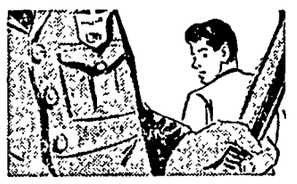
By Lawrence Gould

Should you take "report cards" seriously?

Answer: Yes, but not too much so. Learning to make reasonably good marks in school is part of a child's training to meet the requirements of the world that he will have to live in, and if he is led to feel his marks "don't matter" he may get the idea that other adjustments like obeying the law of the land don't matter, either. But don't go to the extreme of making him feel that a failure in school is a crushing disgrace, or to the other extreme of encouraging him to let success in studies take the place of making friends with other children and "belonging" to the group. For that is even more important.

Can "will power" cure an alcoholic?

Answer: No, writes Howard J. Clinebell in the Journal of Clinical Pastoral Work, after studying 79 cases. It is time we gave up the old fashioned notion that the alcoholic could cure himself if he would only "use his will power" and stop drinking. Such an attitude keeps us from understanding his real problem and tends to block his recovery. Alcoholics are sick people who need and deserve help. The root of their illness is anxiety and a sense of personal inadequacy, and such feelings are only made worse by blame and pressure. We must help the alcoholic to develop a real sense of his own value instead of the false self-confidence he gets through drinking.



Are "guilt" and "responsibility" the same?

Answer: Not as a psychiatrist uses the word. "Guilt" is what might be called a "moral value-judgment" and as such, outside the field of science, while "responsibility" is the demonstrable fact that you must take the consequences of your actions. A boy with a cruel, unjust father may not be to blame (or "guilty") if he grows up feeling hostile toward authority in general, but that does not change the fact that if he becomes a lawbreaker, he will be disliked and punished. It is in the effort to avoid a needless sense of guilt that we so often tend to avoid facing the nature and consequences of our actions.

THE FICTION CORNER

BIG RED'S CURE

By Helen Langworthy

3-Minute Fiction

THE reason my husband has been nick-named Big Red is because he's over six feet tall, carrot-topped and peppery dispositioned. While painting our home and reaching far out from the top of the ladder Big Red fell. There were more people than the doctor and I to realize that my husband had broken his leg. He was howling mad!

Surprisingly, though, Big Red wasn't too bad a patient during his long hospitalization. Yes, leave it to him—he did a royal job, nothing simple and routine! His fracture required specialists, operations and enough paraphernalia around his bed to make it resemble Frankenstein's nightmare. That's my Big Red!

During those long months before he came home Big Red said that the thing he was most thankful for was that he was away from the Sanders, the Markhams, and the Keatings.

Perhaps in other neighborhoods there are more family's like those three. If so, I can sympathize with all who live neighbor to thoroughly nice but thoroughly tiresome folks. Take Mr. Sanders, for instance. He has gall stones. The way he describes the pain, the many medicines the doctors have tried to dissolve them is something to remember for days. When anyone suggests an operation, Mr. Sanders gasps, "Oh, no!" You wonder if one would rob him of his only conversational topic!

Little Mrs. Markham is sweet and lovely. She seems so—until she mentions she didn't sleep last night, the night before and for weeks has heard the clock strike every hour! She's tried counting sheep, hot milk and drugs. Nothing helps.

"If this cure doesn't work," Big Red agreed, "I could always do a repeat."

Then there's Mr. Keating. He's next in size to Big Red. His woe is an allergy. When he and his wife come in maybe it's the new davenport pillow that he stares at like it came from Mars. He's spent hours receiving painful shots and telling about them.

WHEN Big Red finally came home and was established in bed he told me to ask the Sanders, Markhams and the Keating's all to visit. Those bores—and all at once. Wondering if complex broken legs could upset a man mentally, I argued gently. Big Red roared so I asked the three couples over.

It must have been the first time anyone had dared having the three chronic complainers under one roof. How the conversation flew! "My painful gall stones—" was interrupted with, "—not a good night's sleep for three years!" Then Mr. Keating pounced on one of Big Red's fluffy blankets and gave us a run down on awful allergies. I looked at my husband. He was smiling!

Then he began! With a voice that could make a general stand at attention, Big Red described the troubles he'd undergone. He reeled off treatments, doctors, specialists, traction affairs, the silver plates that had been applied to his leg bone during the operations, the pain, the sleeplessness, the discomfort, the way the doctors had been perplexed, hundreds of shots! It was terrific. I think my mouth flew open and I forgot to shut it.
